by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of spite
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of spite
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Envy

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,

for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of envy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of envy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Grudging

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of grudging
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of grudging
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Deceit

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,

for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Treachery

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,

for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of treachery
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of treachery
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Obstinacy

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,

for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Impetuosity

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Pride

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,

for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Overweening Pride

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,

for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of overweening pride
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of overweening pride
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Mental Intoxication

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,

for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of mental intoxication
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of mental intoxication
these four conditions must be made to grow.

Negligence

Comprehension

Monks, for the comprehension of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.'

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the comprehension of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,

sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the comprehension of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the comprehension of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the comprehension of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Full Understanding

Monks, for the full understanding of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the full understanding of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,

lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the full understanding of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the full understanding of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the full understanding of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Utter Destruction

Monks, for the utter destruction of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful

and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising

of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the utter destruction of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the utter destruction of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,

together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the utter destruction of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Abandoning

Monks, for the abandoning of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the abandoning of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the abandoning of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the abandoning of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the abandoning of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Destroying

Monks, for the destroying of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the destroying of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the destroying of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the destroying of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the destroying of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Decay

Monks, for the decay of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the decay of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the decay of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the decay of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the decay of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Dispassion

Monks, for dispassion towards negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,

by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for dispassion towards negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,

for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for dispassion towards negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for dispassion towards negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for dispassion towards negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Ending

Monks, for the ending of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),

ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the ending of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought

and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the ending of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the ending of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the ending of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Giving Up

Monks, for the giving up of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,

mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the giving up of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising

of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the giving up of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the giving up of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the giving up of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

§

Renunciation

Monks, for the renunciation of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk dwells,
as regards body,
contemplating body (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards feelings
contemplating feelings (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells as regards mind
contemplating mind (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

He dwells, as regards mind-states,
contemplating mind-states (as transient),
ardent,
mindful
and composed,
by having restrained dejection as to the world
arising from coveting.

Monks, for the renunciation of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to prevent the arising
of bad qualities
that have not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to abandon bad qualities
that have arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
to cause the arising
of good qualities
not yet arisen.

He starts desire,
strives,
sets going energy,
lays hold of thought
and exerts effort
for the persistence of good qualities
that have arisen,
for their non-confusion,
for their more-becoming,
for their increase and development,
for their perfecting.

Monks, for the renunciation of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

▪

Monks, for the renunciation of negligence
four conditions must be made to grow.

What four?

Herein a monk cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are desire,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are energy,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates that basis of psychic power
of which the features are thought,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

He cultivates the basis of psychic power
of which the features are investigation,
together with the co-factors
of concentration and struggle.

Monks, for the renunciation of negligence
these four conditions must be made to grow.

HERE ENDS THE BOOK OF THE FOURS.

---

[1] Sinh. text makes four suttas of this. With it end the First Fifty Suttas; hut in reality 271 according to our arrangement of the text.

[2] Cf. K.S. v, 119 ff. (Arisings of Mindfulness).

[3] Cf. K.S. v, 173 ff. {On the Faculties); Mrs. Rh. D.: Gotama, p. 222

[4] Cf. K.S. v, 226 ff. (On the Bases of Psychic Power).

[5] Vīmaṃsa; cf. Sakya (Mrs. Rhys Davids), p. 250.

[6] Cf. G.S. i, 86 ff.

[ed1] Woodward has made this and the next item into one: "for the utter passionless ending." I have broken it apart but used his translations ("passionless" and "ending") for the meaning of the terms. Bhk. Bodhi's 'fading away' works better.

ed2 Omitted by Woodward. Translation per PED.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers[1]

Sutta 1

The Powers in Brief

---

[1] [1]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

'These are the five powers of a learner.

What five?

The power of faith,
of conscientiousness,
of fear of blame,
of energy and
of insight.

These, monks, are the five powers of a learner.

▪

Wherefore, monks, train yourselves thus:

We will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of faith;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of conscientiousness;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of fear of blame;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of energy;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of insight.

Thus should ye train yourselves, monks.'

---

[1] Balāni. As Indriyāni this set recurs at A. ii, 151; as Balāni at D. iii, 253; M. ii, 12, below V, §204.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 2

The Powers in Detail

---

[2] [1]

'Monks, these are the five powers of a learner.

What five?

The power of faith,
of conscientiousness,
of fear of blame,
of energy and
of insight.

These, monks, are the five powers of a learner.

§

And what, monks, is the power of faith?

[2] Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has faith
and believes in the enlightenment of the Tathāgata:

"Of a truth he is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
abounding in wisdom and right,
the well-gone,
the world-knower,
the incomparable tamer of tamable men,
the teacher of devas and men,
the Buddha, the Exalted One."

This, monks, is called the power of faith.

▪

And what, monks, is the power of conscientiousness?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is conscientious;
he feels conscientious scruple
when acting wrongly in deed, word and thought;
on entering on evil and wrong states.

This, monks, is called the power of conscientiousness.

▪

And what, monks, is the power of the fear of blame?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple is afraid of blame;
he is afraid of the blame that comes
when acting wrongly in deed, word and thought;
on entering on evil and wrong states.

This, monks, is called the power of the fear of blame.

▪

And what, monks, is the power of energy?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple, abiding in active energy, puts away all wrong things
and takes to right things;
steadfast and strenuous,
he shirks not the burden of right things.

This, monks, is called the power of energy.

▪

And what, monks, is the power of insight?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has insight;
he is endowed with insight into the way of growth and decay, with Ariyan penetration of the way to the utter destruction of Ill.

This, monks, is called the power of insight.

These, monks, are the five powers of a learner.

§

Wherefore, monks, ye should train yourselves thus:

We will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of faith;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of conscientiousness;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of fear of blame;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of energy;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of insight.

Thus train ye yourselves, monks.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 3

Dukkha Suttaṃ

Ill

---

[3] [2]

Ill

'Monks, possessing five qualities
a monk, in this very world,
lives ill at ease,
vexed,
troubled,
pained;
on the breaking up of the body, after death,
an ill-faring may be expected[1] for him.

What five?

[3] Monks, herein a monk is without faith, unconscientious,
has no fear of blame,
is indolent and
lacking in insight.

Monks, possessing these five qualities
a monk, in this very world,
lives ill at ease,
vexed,
troubled,
pained;
on the breaking up of the body, after death,
an ill-faring may be expected for him.

§

Monks, possessing five qualities
a monk lives wholly at ease in this world,
free of vexation,
trouble and
pain;
on the breaking up of the body, after death,
a well-faring may be expected for him.

What five?'

Monks, herein a monk has faith, conscientiousness,
fear of blame,
energy and
insight.

Monks, possessing these five qualities
a monk lives wholly at ease in this world,
free of vexation,
trouble and
pain;

on the breaking up of the body, after death,
a well-faring may be expected for him.

---

[1] Cf. It. 22f.; S. iii, 8; A. i, 202, below VI, § 75.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 4

Due[1]

---

[3] [3]

'Monks, possessing five qualities a monk is duly[2] cast into hell.

What five?

Herein a monk, faithless, unconscientious, reckless of blame, is indolent, is without insight.

Possessing these five a monk is duly cast into hell.

§

Monks, possessing five qualities a monk is duly set in heaven.

What five?

Herein a monk, faithful, conscientious, fearful of blame, is energetic, has insight.

Monks, possessing these five qualities a monk is duly set in heaven.

---

[1] Our text reads bhatalṅ, but Sinh. edit. katan̓; see G.S. i, 6 n. 2 on yathābhatan̓.

[2] Yathābhatan̓. Cf. below V, §115.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 5

Sikkhā-Paccakkhāna Suttaṃ

The Training

---

[4] [3]

'Monks, whatsoever monk or nun
disavows the training
and returns to the lower life,[1]
five matters for self-blame and reproach[2]
from the standpoint of Dhamma
come to him here and now.

What five?

In you[3] (he thinks)
there was verily no faith in right things,
no conscientiousness,
no fear of blame,
no energy and
no insight into right things.

Monks, whatsoever monk or nun
disavows the training
and returns to the lower life,

these five matters for self-blame and reproach
from the standpoint of Dhamma
come to him here now.

§

Monks, whatsoever monk or nun lives the godly life in perfect [4] purity, though with tearful face
he cries in pain and distress, five matters for self-praise
from the standpoint of Dhamma
come to him here now.

What five?

(He thinks) in you, verily,
there was faith in right,
conscientiousness,
fear of blame,
energy and
insight into right things.

Monks, these five matters for self-praise
from the standpoint of Dhamma
come to him here now.'

---

[1] See notes on this phrase at G.S. i. 143; Dial. i. 223.

[2] The Sinh. edit. reads vādānupātā, our text vādānuvādā.

[3] Te.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 6

The Stepping In

---

[5] [4]

'Monks, there is no stepping in of wrong,
so long as faith is set on right things;
but when faith has vanished,
disbelief prevails and stays;
then there is a stepping in of wrong.

▪

Monks, there is no stepping in of wrong,
so long as conscientiousness is set on right things;
but when conscientiousness has vanished, unconscientiousness prevails and stays;
then there is a stepping in of wrong.

▪

Monks, there is no stepping in of wrong,
so long as fear of blame is set on right things;
but when fear of blame has vanished,
recklessness of blame prevails and stays;
then there is a stepping in of wrong.

▪

Monks, there is no stepping in of wrong,
so long as energy is set on right things;
but when energy has vanished,
indolence prevails and stays;
then there is a stepping in of wrong.

▪

Monks, there is no stepping in of wrong,
so long as insight is set on right things;
but when insight has vanished,
lack of insight prevails and stays;
then there is a stepping in of wrong.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 7

Of pleasure

---

[5] [4]

'Almost all beings find delight in pleasures,[1] monks;
and of the clansman, who has laid aside sickle and pingo[2] and gone forth from the home to the homeless life, it is right to say:

"By faith has the clansman gone forth."

And why?

Pleasures, monks, are gotten in youth;
yea, those of all kinds.

Moreover, monks, low pleasures and the middling sort and those that are high-pitched,[3] they are all just reckoned pleasures.

▪

Monks,[4] suppose a foolish baby boy, sprawling on his back, were, owing to the carelessness of his nurse, to put a piece of stick or stone in his mouth; with what utmost haste would she at once attend to the matter and quickly remove it.

And if she could not get at it at once she would clasp him round the [5] head with her left hand, and with her right, crooking her finger, fetch it out, even though she drew blood.

And why?

Monks, such a thing is a danger to the child;
it is not harmless, I say.

Moreover, monks, such an act ought to be done by the nurse out of love, seeking the child's good,
from pity and compassion.

But when that boy is older and sensible,
then, monks, she no longer looks after him, knowing:

"The lad is now self-warded, has done with remissness."

▪

In just the same way, monks, so long as right things are not done by a monk by faith, conscientiousness, fear of blame, energy and insight, that monk must be watched over by me;
but when right things are so done,
then I no longer look after him, knowing:
"The monk is now self-warded,[5] has done with remissness.

---

[1] Kāmesu palāḷitā, so Sinh. edit. and Comy., explaining: vatthukāma-kilesakāmesu abhiratā; see DhS. trsl. 43 n.

[2] Comy. The sickle to cut grass and the pingo to carry it away.

[3] Comy. apportions these pleasures to low-class people, middle-class and rajahs, respectively.

[4] This simile recurs at M. i, 395; the opening phrase is stock. cf. M. i, 324, ii, 24; Mil. 40.

[5] Attagutto. Dhp. 379.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 8

He falls away

---

[6] [5]

'Monks, possessed of five things a monk falls away, finding no support in Saddhamma.[1]

What five?

Without faith a monk falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
without conscientiousness a monk falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
without fear of blame a monk falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
being indolent a monk falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
without insight a monk falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma.

Monks, possessed of these five things a monk falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma.

§

Monks, possessed of five things a monk falls not away, finding support in Saddhamma.

What five?

With faith a monk falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma;
with conscientiousness a monk falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma;
with fear of blame a monk falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma;
with energy a monk falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma;
with insight a monk falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma.

---

[1] On this emphatic term (usually rendered 'good' dhamma) see Vol. I, ix ff.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 9

No Respect

---

[7] [5]

Monks, possessed of five things an unruly[1] monk, lacking in respect, falls away, finding no support in Saddhamma.

What five?

[6] Without faith an unruly monk, lacking in respect, falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
without conscientiousness an unruly monk, lacking in respect, falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
without fear of blame an unruly monk, lacking in respect, falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
being indolent an unruly monk, lacking in respect, falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma;
without insight an unruly monk, lacking in respect, falls away,
finding no support in Saddhamma.

Monks, possessed of these five things an unruly monk, lacking in respect, falls away, finding no support in Saddhamma.

§

Monks, possessed of five things a humble monk, having respect, falls not away, finding support in Saddhamma.

What five?

With faith a humble monk, having respect, falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma,
with conscientiousness a humble monk, having respect, falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma;
with fear of blame a humble monk, having respect, falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma;
with energy a humble monk, having respect, falls not away,
finding support in Saddhamma;
with insight a humble monk, having respect, falls not away, finding support in Saddhamma.

---

[1] Appatisso, the Comy. explains: ajeṭṭhako anīcavutti, 'having no senior, not of humble conduct.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
I: Sekha-Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

I: The Learner's Powers

Sutta 10

Without Respect

---

[8] [6]

'Monks, possessed of five things an unruly monk, lacking in respect, cannot attain to growth, increase and fullness in this discipline of Dhamma.[1]
What five?

Without faith an unruly monk,
lacking in respect,
cannot attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;
without conscientiousness an unruly monk,
lacking in respect,
cannot attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;
without fear of blame an unruly monk,
lacking in respect,
cannot attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;
being indolent an unruly monk,
lacking in respect,
cannot attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;

without insight an unruly monk,
lacking in respect,
cannot attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma.

Monks, possessed of these five things an unruly monk,
lacking in respect,
cannot attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma.

§

Monks, possessed of five things a humble monk,
having respect,
can attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma.

What five?

With faith a humble monk,
having respect,
can attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;
with conscientiousness a humble monk,
having respect,
can attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;
with fear of blame a humble monk,
having respect,
can attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;
with energy a humble monk,
having respect,

can attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma;
with insight a humble monk,
having respect,
can attain to growth, increase and fullness
in this discipline of Dhamma.

---

[1] This is a stock phrase; cf. A. ii, 26; It. 113; Vin. i, 60.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 11

Tathāgata Bala Suttaṃ

Things Unheard Of

---

[9] [6]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, I claim to have reached supreme mastery in things not heard of formerly.[1]

Monks,[2] for a Tathāgata
these are the five powers
of one who has won through to the truth, possessed of which
a Tathāgata claims the chief place, roars the lion's roar among the peoples
and sets rolling the Divine Wheel.

What five?

The power of faith,
the power of conscientiousness,
the power of the fear of blame,
the power of energy
and the power of insight.

Monks, for a Tathāgata
these are the five powers
of one who has won through to the truth,
possessed of which a Tathāgata claims the chief place,
roars the lion's roar among the peoples
and sets rolling the Divine Wheel.'

---

[1] Cf. M. ii, 211 for this phrase, suggestive, where it stands, of later insertion; Comy. for dhammā: things, glosses with catu-sacca-dhammā.

[2] This passage recurs at M. i, 69; S. ii, 27; A. ii, 9; v, 33, etc., where generally ten powers are referred to, and are totally different from these five. As a set these five do not appear to occur except in this Section; they are included in the Sevens; see A. iv, 3, also D. iii, 253. It is difficult to see how they are the powers of a Tathāgata. Comy. observes: Yathā tehi gantahbaṃ tath'eva gatāni pavattāni ñāṇabalāni. See Introduction.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 12

Kūṭa Suttaṃ aka Sekha-bala Agga Suttaṃ

The Peak

---

[10] [7]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five powers of a learner.

What five?

The power of faith,
conscientiousness,
fear of blame,
energy and insight.

Monks, these are the five.

▪

Monks, of these five learner's powers
this is the chief,
this is the binder,
this is the tie,
that to say:
the power of insight.

▪

Monks,[1] just as in a house with a peaked roof,
this is the chief,
this is the binder,
this is the tie,[2]
that is to say:
the peak;
even so, monks,
of these five learner's powers
this is the chief,
this is the binder,
this is the tie,
that to say:
the power of insight.

▪

Wherefore, monks, train yourselves thus:

We will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of faith;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of conscientiousness;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of fear of blame;
we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of energy;

we will become possessed of the learner's power called the power of insight.

Train yourselves thus, monks.'

---

[1] This simile recurs at M. i, 322; for allied similes see below VI, § 53.

[2] Sanghātaniya, so Comy. and S.e,; M. sanghātanika, but see p. 557. P.E.D. does not notice the former.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 13

Bala-Saṅikhitta Suttaṃ

The Powers In Brief

---

[10] [7]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five powers.

What five?

The power of faith,
the power of energy,
the power of mindfulness,
the power of concentration
and the power of insight.

Monks, these are the five powers.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 14

Bala-Vitthata Suttaṃ

The Powers in Detail

---

[10] [7]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five powers.

What five?

The power of faith,
the power of energy,
the power of mindfulness,
the power of concentration
and the power of insight.

Monks, these are the five powers.'

§

And what, monks,
is the power of faith?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple
has faith
and believes in the enlightenment of the Tathāgata:

"Of a truth he is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
abounding in wisdom and right,
the well-gone,
the world-knower,
the incomparable tamer of tamable men,
the teacher of devas and men,
the Buddha,
the Exalted One."

This, monks, is called the power of faith.

▪

And what, monks,
is the power of energy?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple,
abiding in active energy,
puts away all wrong things
and takes to right things;
steadfast and strenuous,
he shirks not the burden of right things.

This, monks, is called
the power of energy.

▪

And what is the power of mindfulness?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple
is mindful;
he is endowed with the highest mindfulness and discrimination;
he remembers and calls to mind
what was said and done long ago.

This, monks, is called the power of mindfulness.

▪

And what is the power of concentration?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple,[1]
aloof from sensuous appetites,
aloof from evil ideas,
enters and abides in the first [8] musing,
wherein applied and sustained thought works,
which is born of solitude
and is full of joy and ease;
suppressing applied and sustained thought,
he enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of joy and ease,
free from applied and sustained thought,
and there the mind becomes calm and one-pointed;
free from the zest for joy,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being

that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease;
by putting away ease and by putting away ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill.

This, monks, is called
the power of concentration.

■

And what, monks,
is the power of insight?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple
has insight;
he is endowed with insight into the way of growth and decay,
with Ariyan penetration of the way to the utter destruction of Ill.

This, monks, is called
the power of insight.

Monks, these are the five powers.'[2]

---

[1] See DhS. trsl. 43 ff. and full notes there.

[2] This set is found throughout the Canon - e.g., M. ii, 12; S. v, 219; referred to at D. ii, 120.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 15

Bala-Daṭṭhabba Suttaṃ

Where To Be Seen

---

[11] [8]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five powers.

What five?

The power of faith,
the power of energy,
the power of mindfulness,
the power of concentration
and the power of insight.

Monks, these are the five powers.

§

And where, monks, is the power of faith to be seen?

In the four factors[1] of Streamwinning.

There is the power of faith to be seen.

▪

And where, monks, is the power of energy to be seen?

In the four right efforts.[2]

There is the power of energy to be seen.

▪

And where, monks, is the power of mindfulness to be seen?

In the four uprisings of mindfulness.[3]

There is the power of mindfulness to be seen.

▪

And where, monks, is the power of concentration to be seen?

In the four musings.[4]

There is the power of concentration to be seen.

▪

[9] And where, monks, is the power of insight to be seen?

In the four Ariyan truths.[5]

There the power of insight is to be seen.

These, monks, are the five powers.'

---

[1] For one set see below V, § 179; K.S. ii, 49; Dial. ii, 99 (as the Mirror of Dhamna), but see D. iii, 227 for another, probably here referred to.

[2] K.S. v. 219 ff.

[3] See K.S. v, 119 ff., there called 'stations.'

[4] As in § 14.

[5] Ill, its coming to be, etc.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 16

Dutiya Bala Agga Suttaṃ

The Peak

---

[12] [9]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five powers.

What five?

The power of faith,
the power of energy,
the power of mindfulness,
the power of concentration
and the power of insight.

■

Monks, of these five learner's powers
this is the chief,
this is the binder,
this is the tie,
that to say:
the power of insight.

§

Monks, just as in a house with a peaked roof,
this is the chief,
this is the binder,
this is the tie,
that is to say:
the peak;
even so, monks,
of these five powers
this is the chief,
this is the binder,
this is the tie,
that to say:
the power of insight.

§

Wherefore, monks, train yourselves thus:

We will become possessed of the power called the power of faith;
we will become possessed of the power called the power of

conscientiousness;
we will become possessed of the power called the power of fear of blame;
we will become possessed of the power called the power of energy;
we will become possessed of the power called the power of insight.

Train yourselves thus, monks.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 17

Attahita Suttaṃ

For Whose Good? (a)

---

[12] [9]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things
a monk is set on his own good,
but not the good of another.

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk is perfect in virtue himself,
but does not strive to perfect virtue in another;
he is perfect in concentration himself,
but does not strive to perfect concentration in another;
his own release[1] is perfected,

but he does not strive that another's should be;
his own vision[2] and knowledge of release are perfected,
but he does not strive that another's should be.

Monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is set on his own good,
but not the good of another.'

---

[1] Comy. the fruit of arahantship.

[2] Comy. review (paccavekkhana) as in a mirror; cf. M. i, 415; UdA. 233.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 18

Parahita Suttaṃ

For Whose Good? (b)

---

[13] [9]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things
a monk is set on the good of another,
but not his own good.

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk strives to perfect virtue in another but does not perfect virtue in himself;
he strives to perfect concentration in another,
but does perfect concentration in himself;
he strives to perfect release in another,

but he does not perfect release in himself;
he strives to perfect vision and knowledge of release in another, but he does not perfect vision and knowledge of release in himself.

Monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is set on the good of another,
but not his own good.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 19

N'eva Attahita-no Parahita Suttaṃ

For Whose Good? (c)

---

[13] [9]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things
a monk is neither set on his own good,
nor the good of another.

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk is neither perfect in virtue himself, nor does he strive to perfect virtue in another;
he is neither perfect in concentration himself,
nor does he strive to perfect concentration in another;
neither is his own release is perfected,

nor does he strive that another's should be;
neither is his own vision and knowledge of release are perfected,
nor does he strive that another's should be.

Monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is neither set on his own good,
nor the good of another.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
II: Bala Vagga

The Book of the Fives

II: The Powers

Sutta 20

Attahita-Parahita Suttaṃ

For Whose Good? (d)

---

[14] [10]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things
a monk is both set on his own good,
and the good of another.

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk is perfect in virtue himself,
and he strives to perfect virtue in another;
he is perfect in concentration himself,
and he strives to perfect concentration in another;
his own release is perfected,

and he strives that another's should be;
his own vision and knowledge of release are perfected,
and he strives that another's should be.

Monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is both set on his own good,
and the good of another.[1]

---

[1] The persons in these four suttas are called by the Comy. the virtuous, the wicked but learned, the unlearned and wicked, the learned arahant. The general form recurs elsewhere - e.g., A. ii, 95 ff.; iv, 220; D. iii, 233.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 21

Paṭhama Agārava Suttaṃ

Without Respect (a)

---

[14] [10]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, that a disrespectful and unruly monk,
not dwelling in harmony with his fellows in the godly life,
will keep the minor precepts[1] -
such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep the learner's code[2]
without keeping the minor precepts -
such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep the virtues[3] without keeping the learner's code -

such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep right views without keeping the virtues -
such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep right concentration without keeping right views -
such a thing is not possible.

But, monks, that a monk,
respectful and obedient,
dwelling in harmony with his fellows in the godly life,
will keep the minor precepts -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep the minor precepts,
he will keep the learner's code -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep the learner's code,
he will keep the virtues -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep the virtues,
he will keep right views -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep right views,
he will keep right concentration -
such a thing shall surely be.'

---

[1] Abhisamācārikaṃ dhammaṃ. Comy. the highest conduct in accord with the duties (vatta, Ch. 657), the declared morality. Cf. Vism. 11.

[2] Sekhaṃ dhammaṃ. Comy. sekha-sīlaṃ, for which see G.S. i, 199. At Vism. 12 n. 3 (also trsl.) this passage is said to be quoted, but there 'ādibrahmacariyaka' replaces our 'sekha.' See below VI, §§ 67-8.

[3] Sīlāni. Comy. the four great 'sīlas'; this seems to be a commentarial division; see Rhys Davids' note at Q. of M. ii, 57; moreover, the word 'mahāsīlāni' does not seem to occur in the Nikāyas, though at D. i, 12 [sic pg 9] there is a subdivision called 'mahā-sīlaṃ,' which is probably a late editorial addition. There is a fourfold division given at Vism. 11, also J. iii, 195; this is given at Q. of M. ii, 221, and is shown as being additional to the sīlaṃ of D. i, 4-12.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 22

Dutiya Agārava Suttaṃ

Without Respect (b)

---

[15] [10]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, that a disrespectful and unruly monk,
not dwelling in harmony with his fellows in the godly life,
will keep the [11] minor precepts -
such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep the learner's code
without keeping the minor precepts -
such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep the whole body[1] of virtues without the learner's code -

such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep the whole body of concentrative exercises without the virtues -
such a thing is not possible.

That he will keep the whole body of insight without the concentrative exercises -
such a thing is not possible.'

§

But, monks, that a monk,
respectful and obedient,
dwelling in harmony with his fellows in the godly life,
will keep the minor precepts -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep the minor precepts,
he will keep the learner's code -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep the learner's code,
he will keep the whole body of virtues -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep the virtues,
he will keep the whole body of concentrative exercises -
such a thing shall surely be.

That if he keep the whole body of concentrative exercises, he will keep the whole body of insight -
such a thing shall surely be.'

[1] Khandha. Comy. rāsi (heap). The three constantly recur: D. iii, 229; M. i, 301; A. i, 291; It. 51; Vin. i, 62.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 23

Upakkilesa Suttaṃ

The Debasements

---

[16] [11]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] there are these five debasements of gold by reason of which
debased gold is neither pliable
nor workable,
nor bright,
but is brittle
and of no use for the best work.

What five?

Iron,
copper,
tin,
lead
and silver.[2]

Monks, these five debase gold.

§

But when gold is free of these five debasements,
it is pliable
and workable
and bright,
nor is it brittle,
but fit for the best work;
and whatever sort of ornament one wants,
whether a signet-ring
or an ear-ring,
a necklace
or a gold chain,
it can be used for that.[3]

§

In just the same way, monks,
there are these five debasements of the mind
by reason of which
a debased mind

is neither pliable
nor workable
nor bright,
but is brittle[4]
and not rightly composed for the destruction of the cankers.

What five?

Sensual desire,
ill-will,
sloth and torpor,
flurry and worry,
and doubt.[5]

▪

[12] But when the mind is free of these five debasements, it is pliable
and workable
and bright,
nor is it brittle,
but is rightly composed
for the destruction of the cankers;
and one can bend the mind to the realization by psychic knowledge of whatever condition is realizable by psychic knowledge, and become an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may be.[6]

§

Should one wish:

"I would experience psychic power
in manifold modes -

Being one,
I would become many;
being many,
I would become one;
I would become visible or invisible;[7]
I would go without let
through walls,
through fences,
through mountains,
as if they were but air;
I would dive in and out of the earth,
as if it were but water;
I would walk on water
without parting it,
as if it were earth;
I would travel cross-legged through the air,
as a bird on the wing;
I would handle and stroke the moon and the sun,
though they be so powerful and strong;
I would scale[8] the heights of the world
even in this body"[9] -

one becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may be.

▪

Should one wish:

"With the celestial means[10] of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would hear sounds
both of devas and mankind,
both far and near" -

one becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range maybe.

▪

Should one wish:

"I would compass
and know with my mind
the thoughts of other beings,
other persons;
I would know the passionate mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the malignant mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the infatuated mind as such,
[13] the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the congested mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the diffuse mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the lofty mind as such,
the low mind as such;
I would know the better mind as such,
the inferior mind as such;
I would know the controlled mind as such,
the uncontrolled as such;
I would know the liberated mind as such,
the mind not freed as such" -

one becomes an eyewitness
in every case
whatever the range may be.

▪

Should one wish:

"I would call to mind
many a previous dwelling,
that is to say,
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each,
such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
that faring on thence
I arose there,
when such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,

such my span of life;
faring on thence
I arose here;
thus I would call to mind
each detail and circumstance
of my many previous dwellings" -

one becomes an eyewitness in every case, whatever the range may be.

▪

Should one wish:

"With the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would see beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
I would see them pass
according to their works;
thus these worthies
were given over to evil ways
in deed,
word
and thought,
defamers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
reaping the reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in hell,
the wayward way,

the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
or,
those acted rightly
in deed,
word
and thought,
they were no defamers of the Ariyans,
but held right views
and reaped their reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in heaven,
that happy place of bliss;
thus, with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would see beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
I would see them pass
according to their works" -

[14] one becomes an eyewitness in every case, whatever the range may be[11]

▪

Should one wish:

"Having destroyed the cankers,
I would enter
and abide in

the emancipation of the mind,
in the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
having realized that state
by my own knowledge
even in this very life -

one becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may be.

---

[1] Cf. the opening of this sutta with K.S. v, 77 (I think we ought to read 'easily broken up,' not 'nor ...' there, as our text and A. i, 254) and the whole with G.S. i, 231 ff.

[2] This set is stock: S. v, 92; D. ii, 351; J. ii, 296 (rajataṃ for sajjhuṃ there, as our Comy.); Mil. 331. Our text reads sajjhaṃ, S.e. as Comy.

[3] This phrase recurs at A. i, 254 (quoted at Vism. 247), but there the reading is paṭṭakāya for our muddikāya (S.e. agrees).

[4] K.S. loc. cit. 'not'; our Comy. ārammaṇe cuṇṇavicuṇṇabhāvā-pagamanena bhijjanasabhāvaṃ..

[5] For this set see D. i, 246; M. i, 60; S. v. 60; [? §179 180?] A. iv, 457, etc.

[6] See G.S. i, 233; M. i, 494; A. iv, 421; the phrase is stock.

[7] See Bu.'s comment at Vism. trsl. 452.

[8] Saṅvatteyyaṃ. S.e.: vasaṃ vatteyyaṃ, see note at K.S. v, 233.

[9] This passage and the following are the stock sets of psychic power; in addition to the references given in n. 1 above see Dial. i, 88; K.S. v, 236.

S.e. here does not give in full, but it reads at A. i, 255 (p. 154)(?): abkijjamīno, see P.E.D. s.v.

[10] See Vism. trsl. 472 ff.

[11] These five came to be known as the Abhiññā's, or super-knowledges, and a sixth, of a discrepant kind, was added. Inserted below, it is here out of place.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 24

Dussīla Suttaṃ

For the Wicked

---

[19] [14]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] for the wicked,
who lack virtue,
right concentration is perforce destroyed;
when right concentration is not,
true[2] knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks right concentration;
when true knowledge and insight are not,
aversion[3] and dispassion
are perforce destroyed

in one who lacks true knowledge and insight;
when aversion and dispassion are not,
emancipated[4] knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks aversion and dispassion.

▪

Monks, just as in the case of a tree,
devoid of branches and leaves,
its shoots come not to maturity,
nor its bark,
nor its sapwood,
nor its core;
even so in the wicked,
who lack virtue,
right concentration is perforce destroyed;
when right concentration is not,
true knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks right concentration;
when true knowledge and insight are not,
aversion and dispassion
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks true knowledge and insight;
when aversion and dispassion are not,
emancipated knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks aversion and dispassion.

§

Monks, in the moral and virtuous, right concentration perforce thrives;
when there is right concentration,
true knowledge and insight
perforce thrive
in one who has right concentration;
when there is true knowledge and insight,
aversion and dispassion
perforce thrive
in one who has true knowledge and insight;
when there is aversion and dispassion,
emancipated knowledge and insight
perforce thrive
in one who has aversion and dispassion.

▪

Monks, just as in the case of a tree, possessing branches [15] and leaves,
its shoots,
its bark,
sapwood
and core
come to maturity;
even so in the moral and virtuous
right concentration perforce thrives;
when there is right concentration,
true knowledge and insight
perforce thrive
in one who has right concentration;
when there is true knowledge and insight,
aversion and dispassion
perforce thrive
in one who has true knowledge and insight;
when there is aversion and dispassion,
emancipated knowledge and insight

perforce thrive
in one who has aversion and dispassion.'

---

[1] Cf.. below V, § 168; VI, § 50; A. iv, 99, 330; v, 4, 313.

[2] Comy. taruṇa: fresh insight, see DhS. trasl. 256 n.

[3] Comy. balava-vipassanā.

[4] Comy. phala-vimutti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 25

Anuggahīta Suttaṃ

Helped On

---

[20] [15]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, helped on[1] by five things right view ripens to mind emancipation
and the advantages of mind emancipation, ripens to insight-emancipation
and the advantages of insight-emancipation.

By what five?

Herein, monks, right view is helped on by virtue,
is helped on by learning,

is helped on by discussion,
is helped on by tranquillity is helped on by inward vision.[2]

Monks, helped on by these five things right view ripens to mind emancipation
and the advantages of mind emancipation,
ripens to insight-emancipation
and the advantages of insight-emancipation.'

---

[1] Anuggahītā. Comy. anurakkhita, likening the matter to a man growing a mango tree; intuitive right view is the planting of a sweet mango seed; the care of it by virtue, making the boundary; learning is the watering; discussion, the root-cleaning; tranquillity, the clearing away of the insects, etc.; inward vision, the freeing of the cobwebs. As a tree, thus cared for, will grow quickly and bear fruit, so will right view, cared for by virtue, etc., grow quickly by reason of the Way and bear the fruit of mind-emancipation and insight-emancipation.

[2] The last four of this set recur at A. ii, 140 (with savana for suta).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 26

Vimuttāyatana Suttaṃ

Release[1]

---

[21] [15]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five spheres[2] of release wherein the unreleased mind of a monk,
abiding zealous,
ardent
and resolute,
finds release;
or the cankers,
not yet wholly destroyed,
come to complete destruction;
or the unsurpassed peace from effort,

not yet attained,
is won.

What five?

Monks, take the case when the Master,
or some fellow in the godly life
who acts as teacher,
instructs a monk in Dhamma —
while he teaches,
that monk partakes of both the spirit
and the letter
of this Dhamma;
when the Master,
or some fellow in the godly life
who acts as teacher,
instructs a monk in Dhamma
gladness[3] springs [16] up;
from that, zest;[4]
in such a state his whole[5] being calms down;
when he is calm,
ease is experienced;
and for him who dwells at ease
the mind is composed.[6]

Monks, this is the first sphere of release
wherein the unreleased mind of a monk,
abiding zealous,
ardent
and resolute,
finds release;
or the cankers,
not yet wholly destroyed,
come to complete destruction;
or the unsurpassed peace from effort,

not yet attained,
is won.

§

Again, monks, when the Master,
or some fellow in the godly life
who acts as teacher,
does not instruct him in Dhamma,
but he himself instructs others in detail
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it by heart —
while he thus teaches,
that monk partakes of both the spirit
and the letter
of this Dhamma;
when he himself instructs others in detail
as he has heard dhamma,
as he has learnt it by heart
gladness springs up;
from that, zest;
in such a state his whole being calms down;
when he is calm,
ease is experienced;
and for him who dwells at ease
the mind is composed.

Monks, this is the second sphere of release
wherein the unreleased mind of a monk,
abiding zealous,
ardent
and resolute,

finds release;
or the cankers,
not yet wholly destroyed,
come to complete destruction;
or the unsurpassed peace from effort,
not yet attained,
is won.

§

Or else, monks, when the Master,
or some fellow in the godly life
who acts as teacher,
does not instruct him in Dhamma,
nor does he himself instruct others in detail
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it by heart,
but he repeats Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it;
and while doing so,
that monk partakes of both the spirit
and the letter
of this Dhamma;
when he repeats Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it
gladness springs up;
from that, zest;
in such a state his whole being calms down;
when he is calm,
ease is experienced;

and for him who dwells at ease
the mind is composed.

Monks, this is the third sphere of release
wherein the unreleased mind of a monk,
abiding zealous,
ardent
and resolute,
finds release;
or the cankers,
not yet wholly destroyed,
come to complete destruction;
or the unsurpassed peace from effort,
not yet attained,
is won.

§

Or else, monks, when the Master,
or some fellow in the godly life
who acts as teacher,
does not instruct him in Dhamma,
nor does he himself instruct others in detail
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it by heart,
nor does he repeat Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it;
but in his heart
he ponders
and reflects on Dhamma,
as he has heard it,

as he has learnt it;
he reviews it carefully in his mind;
and while doing so,
that monk partakes of both the spirit
and the letter
of this Dhamma;
when in his heart
he ponders
and reflects on Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it;
reviews it carefully in his mind
gladness springs up;
from that, zest;
in such a state his whole being calms down;
when he is calm,
ease is experienced;
and for him who dwells at ease
the mind is composed.

Monks, this is the fourth sphere of release
wherein the unreleased mind of a monk,
abiding zealous,
ardent
and resolute,
finds release;
or the cankers,
not yet wholly destroyed,
come to complete destruction;
or the unsurpassed peace from effort,
not yet attained,
is won.

§

Or else, monks, when the Master,
or some fellow in the godly life
who acts as teacher,
does not instruct him in Dhamma,
nor does he himself instruct others in detail
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it by heart,
nor does he repeat Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it;
nor does he, in his heart
he ponder
and reflect on Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learnt it;
nor does he review it carefully in his mind;
but some concentration sign[7]
is rightly grasped by him,
rightly held by the attention,
rightly reflected on,
rightly penetrated by insight;
and while this takes place,
that monk partakes of both the spirit
and the letter
of this Dhamma;
when some concentration sign
is rightly grasped by him,
rightly held by the attention,
rightly reflected on,
rightly penetrated by insight
gladness springs up;
from that, zest;
in such a state his whole being calms down;
when he is calm,

ease is experienced;
and for him who dwells at ease
the mind is composed.

Monks, this is the fifth sphere of release
wherein the unreleased mind of a monk,
abiding zealous,
ardent
and [17] resolute,
finds release;
or the cankers,
not yet wholly destroyed,
come to complete destruction;
or the unsurpassed peace from effort,
not yet attained,
is won.

Monks, these are the five spheres of release
wherein the unreleased mind of a monk,
abiding zealous,
ardent
and resolute,
finds release;
or the cankers,
not yet wholly destroyed,
come to complete destruction;
or the unsurpassed peace from effort,
not yet attained,
is won.'

---

[1] Vimutti. The whole sutta recurs at D. iii, 241; from the notes at Dial. iii, 229 it would seem that D.A. is much the same as our Comy.

[2] Āyatanāni. Comy. kāraṇānī. Dial. occasions.

[3] Pāmujja. Comy. taruṇapīti.

[4] Pīti. Comy. tuṭṭhā kārabhūta balavapīti.

[5] Kāyo. Comy. nāmakāyo, 'name and shape.'

[6] Composed by the concentration which is the fruit of arahantship (Comy.). The passage is a stock one and recurs at D. i, 73; M. i, 37; Vin. i, 294.

[7] Comy. a concentration on one of the thirty-eight objects (ārammana-kasiṇa); see Vism. trsl. 97; Cpd. 64,

---

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 27

Samādhi Suttaṃ

Concentration[1]

---

[24] [17]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, being wise and mindful,
make become immeasurable concentration;
for in those who do,
verily in each one of you,
there shall arise a fivefold[2] knowledge.

What fivefold knowledge?

"This concentration is verily a present ease

and a source of ease for the future"
— even in each this knowledge arises;

"This concentration is Ariyan,[3] not of the flesh"
— even in each this knowledge arises;

"This concentration is not the practice of base men"[4]
— even in each this knowledge arises;

"This concentration is the peace,
the excellent thing,[5]
the winning of calm,
the attainment of one-pointedness,
and the restraint that prevails is not a conscious restraint"
— even in each this knowledge arises;

Self-possessed,
I verily enter upon this concentration,
self-possessed,
I verily emerge from this concentration"
— even in each this knowledge arises.

Monks, being wise and mindful,
make become immeasurable concentration;
for in those who do,
verily in each one of you,
there shall arise this fivefold knowledge.'

---

[1] Samādhi.

[2] These five recur at D. iii, 278 (Dial. iii, 256), the fifth at G.S. i, 233.

[3] Comy. kilesehi ārakattā ariyo, but see A. iv, 145.

[4] But of Buddhas and great men (Comy.).

[5] Comy. not subject to satiety (atappaniyaṭṭhena).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 28

Pañc'aṅgika-Samādhi Suttaṃ

The Five-Limbed

---

[25] [17]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, I will teach you how to make become
the five-limbed
Ariyan right concentration;
listen attentively and pay heed and I will speak."

'Even so, lord,' they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] take the case of a monk, who,
aloof from sensuous appetites,
aloof from evil ideas,
enters and abides in the first musing,

wherein applied and sustained thought works,
which is born of solitude
and is full of joy and ease;
he steeps
[18] and drenches
and fills
and suffuses this body[2]
with a zest and ease,
born of solitude,
so that there is not one particle[3] of the body
that is not pervaded
by this lone-born zest and ease.

Monks, just as a handy bathman or attendant
might strew bath-powder
in some copper basin
and, gradually sprinkling water, knead it together
so that the bath-ball gathered up the moisture, became enveloped in moisture and saturated both in and out, but did not ooze moisture;[4]
even so a monk steeps,
drenches,
fills
and suffuses this body
with zest and ease,
born of solitude,
so that there is not one particle of the body
that is not pervaded
by this lone-born zest and ease.

Monks, this is firstly how to make become the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration.

▪

Or a monk, suppressing applied and sustained thought,
he enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of zest and ease,
free from applied and sustained thought,
and there the mind becomes calm and one-pointed;
he steeps
and drenches
and fills
and suffuses this body
with joy and ease
born of concentration,
so that there is not one particle of the body
that is not pervaded
by this zest and ease
born of concentration.

Monks, imagine a pool with a spring, but no water-inlet
either on the east side or on the west
or on the north
or on the south,
and suppose the (rain-) deva supply not proper rains from time to time — cool waters would still well up from that pool, and that pool would be steeped,
drenched,
filled
and suffused
with the cold water
so that not a drop but would be pervaded

by the cold water;
in just the same way, monks,
a monk steeps
drenches,
fills
and suffuses
his body with zest and ease
born of concentration.

Monks, this is secondly how to make become the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration.

▪

Again, a monk, free from the fervour of zest,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease;
. . . he steeps
and drenches
and fills
and suffuses
this body with a zestless ease
so that there is not one particle of the body that is not pervaded by this zestless ease.

Monks, just as in a pond of blue, white
and red water-lilies,[5]
the plants are born in water,
grow in water,
come not [19] out of the water,
but, sunk in the depths,
find nourishment,

and from tip to root
are steeped,
drenched,
filled
and suffused
with cold water
so that not a part of them is not pervaded by cold water; even so, monks, a monk steeps
and drenches
and fills
and suffuses
his body in zestless ease.

Monks, this is thirdly how to make become
the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration.

▪

Again, a monk, putting away ease
and by putting away ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill;
seated,
he suffuses his body
with purity by the pureness of his mind
so that there is not one particle of the body
that is not pervaded with purity
by the pureness of his mind.

Monks, just as a man might sit with his head[6] swathed in a clean cloth

so that not a portion of it was in contact with that clean cloth; even so
a monk sits suffusing his body
with purity by the pureness of his mind
so that there is not one partide of the body
that is not pervaded with purity
by the pureness of his mind.

Monks, this is fourthly how to make become
the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration.

▪

Again, the survey-sign[7] is rightly grasped by a monk,
rightly held by the attention,
rightly reflected upon,
rightly penetrated by insight.

Monks, just as someone might survey another, standing might survey another sitting,
or sitting might survey another lying down;
even so the survey-sign is rightly grasped by the monk,
rightly held by the attention,
rightly reflected upon,
rightly penetrated by insight.

Monks, this is fifthly how to make become
the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration.

§

Monks, when a monk has thus made become and thus made abundant
the five-limbed Ariyan concentration, he can bend his mind
to realize by higher knowledge
whatever condition is so realizable,
and become an eyewitness in every case,
whatever the range may be.

▪

[20] Monks, suppose a water jar,[8]
brimful of water
so that a crow could drink from[9] it,
were set on a dish;
as soon as a strong man rocked[10] it to and fro would the water spill?'[11]

'Yes, lord.'

'Even so, monks,
when a monk has so made become
and made abundant
the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration,
he can bend the mind
to realize by higher knowledge
whatever condition is so realizable,
and become an eyewitness in every case,
whatever the range may be.

▪

Monks,[12] imagine a tank
on a level piece of ground, with dykes built up on its four sides,
brimful of water

so that a crow could drink from it;
as soon as a strong man loosened the aides here and there would the water flow out?'[13]

'Yes, lord.'

'Even so, monks,
when a monk has so made become
and made abundant
the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration,
he can bend the mind
to realize by higher knowledge
whatever condition is so realizable,
and become an eyewitness in every case,
whatever the range may be.

■

Monks,[14] suppose a carriage, harnessed with thoroughbreds, with goad hanging[15] handy, were to stand on the level,[16] where four main roads meet;
as soon as the coachman,
a capable trainer and driver of horses,' had mounted
and grasped the reins in his left hand and with his right seized the goad, he would drive on or back,[17]
as and how he pleased.

Even so, monks, when a monk has so made become
and made abundant
the five-limbed Ariyan right concentration,
he can bend the mind
to realize by higher knowledge

whatever condition is so realizable,
and become an eyewitness in every case,
whatever the range may be.

§

[21] Should[18] he wish:

"I would experience psychic power
in manifold modes -

Being one,
I would become many;
being many,
I would become one;
I would become visible or invisible;
I would go without let
through walls,
through fences,
through mountains,
as if they were but air;
I would dive in and out of the earth,
as if it were but water;
I would walk on water
without parting it,
as if it were earth;
I would travel cross-legged through the air,
as a bird on the wing;
I would handle and stroke the moon and the sun,
though they be so powerful and strong;
I would scale the heights of the world
even in this body" -

he becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may be.

▪

Should he wish:

"With the celestial means of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would hear sounds
both of; devas and mankind,
both far and near" -

he becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range maybe.

▪

Should he wish:

"I would compass
and know with my mind
the thoughts of other beings,
other persons;
I would know the passionate mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the malignant mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the infatuated mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the congested mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the diffuse mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the lofty mind as such,

the low mind as such;
a would know the better mind as such,
the inferior mind as such;
I would know the controlled mind as such,
the uncontrolled as such;
I would know the liberated mind as such,
the mind not freed as such" -

he becomes an eyewitness
in every case
whatever the range may be.

▪

Should he wish:

"I would call to mind
many a previous dwelling,
that is to say,
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each,
such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,

such my span of life;
that faring on thence
I arose there,
when such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
faring on thence
I arose here;
thus I would call to mind
each detail and circumstance
of my many previous dwellings" -

he becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may be.

▪

Should he wish:

"With the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would see beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
I would see them pass
according to their works;
thus these worthies

were given over to evil ways
in deed,
word
and thought,
defamers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
reaping the reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in hell,
the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
or,
those acted rightly
in deed,
word
and thought,
they were no defamers of the Ariyans,
but held right views
and reaped their reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in heaven,
that happy place of bliss;
thus, with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would see beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
I would see them pass
according to their works" -

he becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may be

■

Should he wish:

"Having destroyed the cankers,
I would enter
and abide in
the emancipation of the mind,
in the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
having realized that state
by my own knowledge
even in this very life -

he becomes an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may be.

---

[1] Cf. the whole of this sutta with D. i, 74 (D.A. i, 217 is materially the same as our Comy.), 232; M. i, 276; ii, 15; iii, 92.

[2] Kāya, here karaja- (Comy.).

[3] Comy. instances, skin, flesh and blood.

[4] Comy. so that yon can put it in your pocket (ovaṭṭikāyaṃ).

[5] Uppala, paduma, and puṇḍarīka. Comy. observes that the first may be any of the three colours; the second is white and has a hundred leaves (see Kh.A. 67 for the use of these); the last is deficient in these hundred leaves and is red (Childers the white lotus). Cf. S. i, 138 for this simile.

[6] Sasīsa.

[7] Paccavekkhanānimitta. Comy. of which there are 19 (UdA. 336; in detail: Vism. 676, trsl. 829). It is noteworthy that this item is omitted from the D. and M. suttas referred to above; but see D. iii, 278 (Dial. iii, 255), where Mrs. Rhys Davids translates 'images for retrospective thought,' adding in a note 'insight on emerging from ecstasy.' (The five at D. differ in items 2 and 4 from our set.) See Cpd. 58 on 'reviewing' after Jhāna. Our simile does not appear to recur elsewhere.

[8] This simile recurs at M. iii, 96.

[9] Comy. a jar with cords around it (sa-mekhalā).

[10] See S.B.E. xi, 178 this expression recurs at D. i, 244; S. ii, 134; Vin. i, 230; Ud. 90.

[11] Āvajjeyya, so S.e.; P.E.D., to cause to yield (?), but suggests the v.l. āvaṭṭeyya, to turn round.

[12] Āgaccheyya.

[13] Cf. M. loc. cit.

[14] This recurs at M. i, 124; iii, 97; S. iv, 176.

[15] Odhasta. Comy. ālambana.

[16] Subhūmiyaṃ, so S.e., but Comy. sa-, glossing sama-.

[17] Sāreyya pi paccāsūreyyai see Vism. trsl. 355, where this phrase is used of racehorses.

[18] D. and M. continue with all this (see references in the first note to this for full details see above, § 23. Our text is not in full.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 29

Cankamā-Nisaṃsa Suttaṃ

The Alley-Walk

---

[29] [21]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five advantages of an alley-walk.[1]

What five?

It hardens[2] one for travelling;
it is good for striving;
it is healthy;
(its use) tends to good digestion after one has eaten and drunk, munched and crunched;
the concentration[3] won from (the thought of) an alley-walk lasts long.

Monks, these are the five advantages of an alley-walk.'

---

[1] Cankama (pron. chankāmā;). Later, it became a cloister or terraced walk; see Vin. ii, 190 (Vin Texts, iii, 103 f.); but originally it must have been merely a clearing in the land about a monk's dwelling; see Comy. at J. i, 7, which gives the five defects (Buddhism in Translations, Warren; Cf. Rh. Davids, Bud. Birth-stories, p. 89 [1925]).

[2] Comy. one is able to endure a long journey.

[3] At A. iv, 87 the Buddha exhorts Moggallāna to concentrate on his alley-walk to get rid of torpor. Comy. here observes: 'By fixing the attention on the alley-walk, a concentration of the eight attainments (A. iv, 410, omitting the last) is won.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
III: Pañc'aṅgika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

III: The Fivefold

Sutta 30

Nāgita Suttaṃ

The Venerable Nāgita

---

[30] [21]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One
with a great company of monks,
while wandering for alms among the Kosalese, came to the brahman village of Icchānangala belonging to them.

And there the Exalted One dwelt in the Icchānangala woodland thicket.

Now the brāhman householders of Icchānangala heard of this.

'Mark you,' they said,
the recluse, Master Gotama, the Sakya, gone forth from the Sakyan clan, has come to Icchānangala and dwells in our wood near by;
and of this same Master [22] Gotama this excellent report goes abroad:

He is the Exalted One,
arahant,
perfectly enlightened,
endowed with wisdom and righteousness,
one well-gone,
a world-knower,
the unsurpassed,
a tamer of tamable men,
a teacher,
a Buddha of devas and men,
the Exalted One!

Having realized more-knowledge himself,
he declares it to this world
with its devas
and Māras
and Brahmas,
to this earth with its recluses and brahmans,
its devas and men;
and he teaches Dhamma,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle
and lovely in the end;
and sets forth the godly life,
utterly pure and perfect,
both in spirit and letter.

Well indeed is it to see such arahants!"

And when the night was over,
they went to the wood,
taking with them a great deal of hard and soft food,
and stood outside the entrance,[1] making a great din and uproar.

▪

Now at that time the venerable Nāgita was the Exalted One's personal attendant.

Then the Exalted One called to the venerable Nāgita and said:

'Who are these, Nāgita, that make this great din and uproar?

Like fisher folk, methinks, with a great haul of fish!'

'These men, lord, are the brahman householders of Icchānangala, who wait outside the gateway.

They have brought much hard and soft food for the Exalted One and for the Order.'

'I have naught to do with homage, Nāgita,
nor has homage aught to do with me.

Whosoever cannot obtain at will,
easily and without difficulty
this happiness of renunciation,
this happiness of seclusion,
this happiness of calm
and this happiness of enlightenment,
which I can obtain at will,
easily and without difficulty,
let him enjoy that dung-like happiness,
that sluggish happiness,
that happiness gotten of
gains,
favours
and flattery.'

'Lord, let the Exalted One accept (their offerings)!

Let the Well-gone accept;
now, lord,
is the time for the Blessed One to accept!

For wheresoever henceforth the Exalted One shall go,
the brahman householders of town and country will be just as inclined (to give).

Lord, just as when the (rain-) deva [23] rains big drops, the water flows with the incline;
even so, lord,
wheresoever the Exalted One shall henceforth go,
the brahman householders of town and country
will be inclined.

And why?

Lord, it is because of the virtue and wisdom of the Edited One.'

'Nāgita, I have naught to do with homage,
nor has homage aught to do with me.

Whosoever cannot obtain at will,
easily and without difficulty
this happiness of renunciation,
this happiness of seclusion,
this happiness of calm
and this happiness of enlightenment,
which I can obtain at will,
easily and without difficulty,
let him enjoy that dung-like happiness,
that sluggish happiness,
that happiness[2] gotten of
gains,
favours
and flattery.'

Verily, Nāgita,
whosoever eats,
drinks,
munches
and crunches
must answer the calls of nature;
such is the issue of it.

Whosoever loves,
to him change
and a state of otherness must come,
grief,
lamentation,
suffering,
sorrow
and despair;[3]
such is the issue of it.

Whosoever is bent on applying himself to the symbol of the unattractive.[4] in him disgust for the symbol of the attractive is established;
such is the issue of it.

Whosoever abides
seeing impermanence in the six spheres of touch,[5]
in him disgust for touch is established;
such is the issue of it.

Verily, Nāgita,
whosoever abides seeing the rise and fall in the fivefold body of attachment,[6]
in him disgust for attachment is established;
such is the issue of it.'

---

[1] All this is a stock opening; see below VI, § 42, D. i, 87, etc. Here the Comy. is silent on Icchānangala.

[2] All this recurs at A. iv, 341; the Comy. here is materially the same. Regarding Nāgita, see Dial. i, 198; Brethren, lxxxvi, and p. 350.

[3] Cf. S. ii, 274; iii, 7; M. ii, 110.

[4] Asubha and subha, from sobhati, to shine, therefore attractive (cf. Vism. trsl. 'as a moth falls into the flame of a lamp, and a man, greedy for honey-drops, licks the blade of a knife besmeared with honey' — it is to avoid such snares that asubha-meditation is enjoined'. The word is more generally translated 'the foul'; see DhS. trsl. 69, Vism. trsl. 205 ff.; Expos. 264 ff.

[5] Contact with the five senses and the mind.

[6] 'That is, all that is 'not the self,' or very man, the skandhas: the physical parts, the feelings, the perceptions, the dispositions and the consciousness; see Mrs. Rhys Davids' Buddh. Psych. 40-56.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 31

Sumanā Suttaṃ

Sumanā, the Rajah's Daughter

---

[32] [24]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there Sumanā,[1] the rajah's daughter, with a following of five hundred royal maidens
in five hundred chariots,
came and visited him; and,
after saluting,
sat down at one side.

So seated, she spoke thus to the Exalted One:

'Lord, suppose two of the Blessed One's disciples were alike in faith,
alike in virtue
and alike in insight,
but one was an alms-giver
and the other was not.

Both, on the breaking up of the body after death,
would be reborn in the happy heaven world;
but among the devas, lord,
would there be a distinction,
a difference,
between them?'

'There would be, Sumanā,'
and the Exalted One said:

'The alms-giver,
when come to deva-state,
surpasses the non-giver
in five ways:
in divine life-span,
beauty,
happiness,
honour
and power.[2]

In these five ways, Sumanā,
the alms-giver,
when come to deva-state,
surpasses the non-giver.'

■

'But if, lord,
faring on thence,
they should return to this state here;
when become human, lord,
would there be a distinction,
a difference,
between them?'

'There would be, Sumanā,'
and the Exalted One said:

'The alms-giver,
as man,
surpasses the non-giver
in five ways:
in human life-span,
beauty,
happiness,
honour
and power.

In these five ways, Sumanā,
the alms-giver,
as man,
surpasses the non-giver.'

▪

'But if both, lord,
were to go forth from the home
into the [25] homeless life;
when gone forth, lord,
would there be a distinction,
a difference,
between them?'

'There would be, Sumanā,'
and the Exalted One said:

'The alms-giver,
when gone forth,
surpasses the non-giver
in five ways:[3]
he is often asked to accept a robe,

he is not rarely asked;
often to accept alms,
not rarely;
often to accept a lodging,
not rarely;
often to accept medicaments for sickness,
not rarely;
with whomsoever he dwells
in leading the godly life,
such folk mostly act towards him with cordiality
in their ways of living, talking
and thinking;
it is rare for them no to act cordially,
cordially they offer service,[4]
seldom without cordiality.

In these five ways, Sumanā,
an alms-giver,
when gone forth,
surpasses the non-giver.*

■

'But, lord, if both win arahantship;
in that state
would there be a distinction,
a difference,
between them?

'In that case, Sumanā, I verily declare there is no difference whatsoever,
that is to say,
comparing emancipation
with emancipation.'

'It is amazing, lord,
it is wonderful, lord,
how far-reaching is the effect of giving alms
and doing good deeds,
since they are a help
and a boon to one
as a deva,
a help and a boon to one
as a man,
yea, a help and a boon
when one has gone forth!'

'It is even so, Sumanā,[51] far-reaching is the effect of giving alms
and doing good deeds,
since they are a help
and a boon to one
as a deva,
a help and a boon to one
as a man,
yea, a help and a boon
when one has gone forth!'

Thus spoke the Exalted One;
and when the Well-gone had thus spoken,
the Master spoke again and said:

'As[6] stainless on her sky-bound course, the moon Outshines in splendour all the stars' array:
Just so the virtuous, believing man
In charity outshines the mean on earth.
Ev'n[7] as the hundred cloud-peaked thunder-storm,
In lightning wreathed, the hills and hollows fills Mean men in these five things: long life and honour, Beauty and happiness, abounding wealth;[8]
And after death lives blissfully in heaven.'

[1] The Comy. relates how she made her resolve in a former life under the Buddha Vipassi. She was the sister of Pasenadi, rajah of Kosala (Nepal), and went forth and won arahantship when old; see Sisters, p. 19. Except here and at A. iv, 345 in a list of upāsikās, her name does not seem to recur in the four Nikāyas. The notice at C.H.I. i, 181, so far as she is concerned, refers to the trsl. of S. i, 69 (K.S. i, 94 n.), not the text; it is curious S.A. does not mention that she was present at the Buddha-Pasenadi talk. Dh'pāla on Thig.16 has much to say; see Sisters, loc. cit.

[2] This is a stock set; Cf. D. iii, 145; S. iv, 275; A. i, 115.

[3] This paragraph recurs below V, § 104, and at A. ii, 87; see G.S. ii, 97, differently translated. Cf. also Dial. i, 76, § 35 f.

[4] Upahāraṃ upaharanti. Comy. on A. ii observes: kāyika-cetasika-upahāraṃ upaharanti, upanīyanti.

[5] Text repeats.

[6] Cf. below VI, § 53 for this simile.

[7] This recurs at S. i, 100; Cf. It. 66.

[8] Bhogaparibbūḷho; the word used above is ādhipateyya ('power').

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 32

Cundī, the Rajah's Daughter

---

[35] [26]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Rājagaha, at the Squirrels' Feeding Ground[1] in the Bamboo Grove;
and there Cundī,[2] the rajah's daughter, attended by five hundred maidens in a like number of chariots,
came and visited him and,
after saluting,
sat down at one side.

Thus seated, Cundī, the rajah's daughter, spoke to the Exalted One thus:

'Lord, our royal brother, Cunda, says this:

'When a woman or man has taken refuge in the Buddha,
has taken refuge in Dhamma,
has taken refuge in the Order,
abstains from taking life,
from taking what is not given,
from carnal lusts,
from lying

and from indulging in spirituous liquor, causing idleness;
he will surely arise,
on the breaking up of the body alter death,
to a fair course,
not to an ill one.

But I, lord, would ask the Exalted One:

With one's trust in what sort of teacher will one surely arise,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
to a fair course
and not to an ill one?

With one's trust in what sort of Dhamma will one surely arise,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
to a fair course
and not to an ill one?

With one's trust in what sort of Order will one surely arise,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
to a fair course
and not to an ill one?

And what sorts of virtuous practices must one perform to arise, after death,
to a fair course and not to an ill one?'

[3] 'Whatsoever beings there are, Cundī, whether footless, two- [27] footed, four-footed or many-footed, whether with bodies or without,
conscious or unconscious or neither conscious nor unconscious, of them the Tathāgata,
arahant,
the perfectly enlightened One,[4] is declared the best;[5] whosoever put their trust in the Buddha,

put their trust in the best,
and unto them is the best reward.

Whatsoever Dhammas are formulated or not formulated,[6] Cundī, of them (the Dhamma of) dispassion is declared the best.

I mean: the crushing of pride,
the quenching of thirst,
the rooting out of lust,
the cutting off of rebirth,
the destruction of craving,
dispassion,
making an end,
Nibbāna;
whosoever put their trust in (this) Dhamma,
put their trust in the best,
and unto them is the best reward.[7]

Whatsoever orders or communities there are, Cundī, of them the Order of the Tathāgata's disciples is declared the best,
that is to say,
the four pairs of men,[8] the eight persons,
that Order of disciples of the Exalted One,
which is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit;
whosoever put their trust in the Order,
put their trust in the best,
and unto them is the best reward.

Whatsoever virtuous practices there are, Cundī, of them those[9] loved by the Ariyans are declared the best,
that is to say,

[28] those unbroken and without a rent, untarnished and without blemish,
bringing freedom,
praised by the wise,
incorrupt
and conducive to concentration;
whosoever perform the virtues,
loved by the Ariyans,
perform the best,
and unto them is the best reward.

For pious men who truly in the best Distinguish best;[10] who in the Buddha see
The gift-worthy, the unsurpassed, the best;
In Dhamma best the ease of passion's calm;
And in the Order best the unrivalled field
For merit - yea, for those who alms bestow
In the best place best merit doth increase,
And life and beauty, honour, fame and power,
Best happiness. Who gives unto the best,
Wise man, in Dhamma best composed, as man Or deva, with the best attained, finds joy.'

---

[1] This 'park' was given to the Older by the rajah Bimbisāra of Magadha (Vin. i, 39); for the legend of its name see Rockhill's Life, 43; Watter's Yuan Chwang, ii, 157; it was the first of its kind.

[2] Except at A. iv, 347 in a list and here she does not seem to be mentioned; Comy. on A. iv: rajakumdri, merely; here we have no comment. She and her brother (not mentioned elsewhere) may have been the children of Bimbisāra, who had at least three wives; see C.H.I. i, 183. Pron. Choondee.

[3] Omitting the fourth clause, what follows recurs at A. ii. 34; It. 87, including the gāthā. See G.S. ii. 38.

[4] This clause also recurs at A. v, 21; Mil. 217.

[5] Agga: tip, top, first, chief, illustrious.

[6] This clause is dealt with exegetically at Vism. trsl. 337, whore dhammā is said to mean states, conditions; sankhatā, conditioned, compounded; see also P.E.D. s.v. yavatā. But it is inconceivable that the B. should talk about 'things definite and indefinite' (P.E.D.) to a young woman who asks him: 'What is truth?' but with Marcus Aurelius he might well say: 'First and foremost, keep unperturbed!' (To himself, viii, 5; Rendall's trsl., 1910); cf. Vin. iii, 20: bhagavatā anekapariyāyena rāgavirāgāya dhammo desito, madanimmadanāya, etc., as here.

[7] For these last three clauses cf. D. ii, 94; iii, 227; S. iv, 272, and Vism. trsl. 252 ff.

[8] Those on the four stages of the Way; see Vism. trsl. 253.

[9] Comy. inserts sīlāni, with two MSS., and observes: magga-phala-sampayuttakāni sīlāni, D.A. ii, 544: pañca sīlani. I suppose it is because these five are mentioned that this sutta is included in the 'Fives.'

[10] Aggaṃ dhammaṃ: the best thing.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 33

Uggaho Meṇḍakanattā Suttaṃ

Uggaha, a Householder[1]

---

[36] [28]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Bhaddiya in Jātiya Wood;
and there Uggaha, Meṇḍaka's grandson, paid him a visit and,
after saluting,
sat down at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, let the Exalted One accept a meal at my house tomorrow, he as fourth (with us three).'[2]

[29] The Exalted One accepted by his silence.

Then Uggaha, Meṇḍaka's grandson, seeing the Exalted One had accepted, rose from his seat,

saluted,
and took his leave;
keeping the Exalted One on his right.

Now when the night was over,
the Exalted One, robing himself in the morning,
took bowl and cloak
and went to Uggaha's house,
and there sat down on the seat made ready.

And Uggaha, Meṇḍaka's grandson, served and satisfied the Exalted One by hand with plenty of hard and soft food and when the Exalted One had removed his hand from his bowl, he sat down at one side.

Thus seated, he said:

'Lord, these girls of mine
will be going to their husbands' families;
lord, let the Exalted One counsel them, let the Exalted One advise them,
for their good and happiness
for many a day!'

Then the Exalted One spoke to them and said:

[3]Wherefore, girls, train yourselves in this way:

To whatsoever husband our parents shall give us — wishing our weal,
seeking our happiness,
compassionate,
because of compassion —
for him we will rise up early,
be the last to retire,
be willing workers,

order all things sweetly and be gentle voiced.[4]

Train yourselves thus, girls.

And in this way also, girls:

We will honour,
revere,
esteem
and respect
all whom our husband reveres, whether mother or father,
recluse or godly man,
and on their arrival
will offer them a seat and water.

Train yourselves thus, girls.

And in this way also, girls:

We will be deft and nimble
at our husband's home-crafts, whether they be of wool or [30] cotton,[5] making it our business to understand the work, so as to do and get it done.

Train yourselves thus, girls.

And in this way also, girls:

Whatever our husband's household consist of — slaves, messengers and work folk — we will know the work of each by what has been done, their remissness
by what has not been done;

we will know the strength and the weakness of the sick;
we will divide the hard and soft food,
each[6] according to his share.

Train yourselves thus, girls.

And in this way also, girls:

The money,
corn,
silver
and gold
that our husband brings home,
we will keep safe watch and ward over it,
and act as no robber,
thief,
carouser,
wastrel
therein.

Train yourselves thus, girls.

Indeed, girls,
possessed of these five qualities,
women, on the breaking up of the body after death,
are reborn among the devas of lovely form.

Active,[7] alert to cherish him always,
Not to that man who brings[8] her every joy
She offers slight; nor will a good wife[9] move
To wrath her husband by some spiteful word;
And she reveres all whom her husband honours,
For she is wise. Deft, nimble, up betimes,
She minds his wealth amid his folk[10] at work
And sweetly orders all. A wife like this,

Who with her husband's wish and will complies,
Is born again where lovely devas dwell.'

---

[1] Mendaka (the ram) was a fabulously rich man with magic powers, which his household were also supposed to possess (see Vin. i, 240; Warren, B. in T. 448); he fed the B. and Order on a journey, after which travelling rations were allowed. Reference is made to him and his family at Vism. trsl. 443 (see note 1, p. 444; the stories, with less exaggeration, are told at Vin. loc. cit.); UdA. 158; DhpA.: Visākhāyā vatthu (Warren, op. cit., 451). His granddaughter was Visākhā (Sisters, p. 16). The family lived at Bhaddiya (our Comy. -ike) — according to Warren, in Bengal, but probably Magadha, since Bimbisāra sent his minister to witness M.'s magic (Vin.). I cannot trace Uggaha elsewhere, our Comy. is silent. Of Jātiyāvana, Comy. observes that the forest was one continuous stretch up the slope of the Himālayas.

[2] Atta-catuttho; Cf. M. I, 393, Comy. says he did so fearing his girls would be nervous (olīnamānā) among the monks and not able to take in the Buddha's words.

[3] These five and the gāthā recur at A. iv, 265.

[4] At D. ii, 175 these terms are applied to the ideal woman, itthiratana; at D. i, 60, [DN 17 § 35] M. ii, 84, [MN 84] S. iii, 113 [SN.22.85] to a servant or a slave; see D.A. i, 168. Cf. Brihaspati Smriti, xxiv, 6 (S.B.E. xxxiii, 368); 'Rising before others, paying reverence to the elders of the family, preparing food and condiments and using a low seat and bed — thus have the duties of women been declared.' Also Proverbs xxxi: 'She rises while it is yet night ... she seeks wool and flax and works willingly with her hands ... she looks well to the ways of her household, and eat not the bread of idleness.'

[5] Of the former Comy. observes: Combing, washing, dyeing, plaiting, working, etc., goat's hair; of the latter: ginning (vaṭṭana); piñjana, ?carding, lit.: painting, in Sk. also to bleach; phoṭana, ? spinning, lit. either to boil or shake; kantana, weaving, more generally spinning.

[6] Comy. with v.l. reads c'assa, as at A. iv.

[7] I take yo to refer to mātugāmo.

[8] With A. iv and Comy. reading -haraṃ for arahaṃ. Comy. -dadaṃ.

[9] Sotthi, Comy. su-itthi.

[10] Parijjanā: doubling the 'j' is no doubt for the sake of the metre, and this spelling has crept into the prose version at A. iv, 269; see P.E.D. s.v.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 34

Sīha-Senāpati Suttaṃ

Sīha, the General[1]

---

[38] [31]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Vesālī,
at the Gabled Hall, in Mahāvana;
and there general Sīha paid him a visit,
saluted him,
and sat down at one side.

So seated, the general said to the Exalted One:

"Is it possible, lord,
to show the visible result of giving?"

"It is possible, Sīha," and the Exalted One said:

"The almsgiver, Sīha,
the liberal man,
is good and dear to many folk;

since he is so, Sīha,
this is the visible result of giving.

Again, the good and wise follow him;
since they do so, Sīha
this is the visible result of giving.

Again, a good report concerning him goes about;
since such occurs, Sīha,
this is the visible result of giving.

Again, whatever company he enters,
be it of nobles,
brahmans,
householders
or recluses,
he enters with confidence and untroubled;[2]
since he does so, Sīha,
this is the visible result of giving.

Again, the almsgiver,
the liberal man,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
is reborn in the happy heaven world;
since that is so, Sīha, it is hereafter the result of giving."

When he had thus spoken,
general Sīha said to the Exalted One:

"Lord, those four visible results of giving declared by the Exalted One — not as to them go I by faith in the Exalted One;
I just know those things.

Lord, I am a giver,
a liberal man,
and am good and dear to many folk;
many good and wise men follow me;
a good report concerning me goes about.

People say:

'General Sīha is an almsgiver,
a worker and a servant of the Order;
whatever company of nobles,
brahmans,
householders
or recluses,
I eater,
I do so with confidence
and untroubled.

I do not go by faith in the Exalted One in regard to these things, [32] I just know them.

But when the Exalted One says to me:

'Sīha, a giver,
a liberal man,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
is reborn in the happy heaven-world —
it is this that I do not know, and it is herein
that I go by faith in the Exalted One.'"

"It is even so, Siha, it is verily just as you say:

A giver, Sīha,
a liberal man,

on the breaking up of the body after death,
is reborn in the happy heaven-world.

Good is the giver, folk will follow him,
Fame he attains and honours grow; among men
He walks untroubled, being liberal
And confident. Wherefore the wise give gifts;
They put aside the stain of stinginess
And, seeking bliss, long in the Thrice-Ten[3] stay, Finding delight in deva-fellowship.

Th' occasion made, the good deed done, hence fare
They on, self-radiant devas, wandering
In Nandana,[4] glad, happy and content
Amid the fivefold pleasures of the sense, Joyed in the teachings of the Unattached,[5]
In heaven disciples of the Man Well-gone.'

---

[1] He was general of the Licchavis, whose capital was Vesalī, and who built this hall for the Buddha; they belonged to a confederacy; see Buddh. India. Sīha was much given to questions like these; Cf. A. iv, 79ff. He was originally a supporter of the Jains.

[2] Amaṅkubhūto.

[3] Tidive; in Theragātha, ver. 534, tidivasmi, one of the names for the next world.

[4] A grove in the heaven of the Thirty Devas; see K.S. i, 8 n., v, 296, where such joy is said to be the lot of a rājā-cakka-vattī; or it may be a grove in another group of devas, for sabba-devalokesu hi Nandana-vanaṃ atthi yeva (J. i, 49). In the Tusita grove of this name the Bodhisatta waited prior to rebirth.

[5] Asita: the quotation from the Comy. in the text note should read ani-, not ati-; see Brethren, 404 n. 2 on this word.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 35

Dānā-Nisaṃsa Suttaṃ

The Advantages from Gifts

---

[41] [32]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five advantages from gifts.

What five?

He is good and dear to many folk;
good and wise men love him;
a good report is spread abroad about him;
he strays not from the householder's Dhamma;[1] and,
on the breaking up [33] of the body after death,
he is reborn in the happy heaven-world.

Monks, these are the five advantages from gifts.

Dear is the giver, goodly the way he takes,
Loved[2] by the good, God-goers,[3] self-restrained;
They teach him Dhamma that dispels all Ill,
That Dhamma he here having come to know,[4]
He rid of cankers waneth utterly.'[5]

---

[1] Gihidhammā anapeto. Comy. akhaṇḍa-pañcasīlā, the Dhamma of a Buddhamātā, J. i, 49.

[2] Comy. reads santo naṃ bhajanti, S.e. santo bhajanti sappurisā.

[3] Brahmacārayo; see Mrs. Rhys Davids' Gotama, 95.

[4] The last two lines of the text recur at Vin. ii, 148, 164; J. i, 94; below, § 38.

[5] Parinibbāti.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 36

Kāla-Dāna Suttaṃ

The Timely Gift

---

[41] [33]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five timely[1] gifts.

What five?

One gives to the new-comer;
to one going away;
to the sick;
when food is hard to get;
the first-fruits of field and orchard[2] he first sets before the virtuous.

Monks, these are the five timely gifts.

Timely, unstinting give the very wise, Hie affable; their timely gift to such
As they[3] — the noble upright Ariyan men —
Is a rich offering[4] that brings man peace;[5]
Nor they who laud,[6] nor they who do the deed Lack offering, but both in merit share.
Give without let of mind where great the fruit,
For living things (such) meritorious deeds
Are in another world a footing sure.'

---

[1] Kāla. Comy. glosses: yutta-, patta-, anucchavika-.

[2] Nava-sassāni, -phalāni. Comy. ārāmato ...

[3] Tādino. Tādī is a term of reverence that came to be given to Founder and to arahants.

[4] Dakkhiṇā, among brāhmans, a sacrificial gift.

[5] Cf. verse 297 at J. i, 93.

[6] Anumodanti. Comy. ekamante ṭhitā anumodanti (cf. 'They also, serve who only stand and wait.')

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 37

Bhojana Suttaṃ

The Gift of a Meal

---

[42] [34]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, in giving a meal,
a giver gives five things
to an almsman.

What five?

He gives life,
beauty,
ease,
strength
and wit.[1]

But in giving life,
he becomes a partaker in life,[2]
in heaven and among men;
in giving beauty,
he becomes a partaker in beauty,
in heaven and among men;
in giving ease,
he becomes a partaker in ease,
in heaven and among men;
in giving strength,
he becomes a partaker in strength,
in heaven and among men;
in giving wits,
he becomes a partaker in wit,
in heaven and among men.

Monks, in giving a meal,
a giver gives these five things
to an almsman.

In giving life and strength and beauty, wit,
In giving ease, wise men find happiness;
Whoso shall give these gifts shall have long life
And honour, wheresoever they be reborn.'[3]

---

[1] Paṭibhāna. Comy. yutta-mutta-paṭibhāna, which, I suppose may mean apt and ready wit, understanding; Bacon's 'a ready man,' but see P.E.D. s.v. mutta, also Pts. of Contr. 379.

[2] The text repeats in full for each. [Ed.: Expanded here according to the Pali.]

[3] Cf. below, § 44, where this line of the text recurs.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 38

Saddha Suttaṃ

The Advantages of Believing

---

[42] [34]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five advantages
for a believing clansman.

What five?

Monks,[1] the good and wise in this world
out of compassion
first feel compassion towards the believer,
never thus to the unbeliever;
when visiting,
they first approach the believer,
never thus to the unbeliever;

when receiving,
they first accept alms of the believer,
never thus to the unbeliever;
when teaching Dhamma,
they first teach the believer,
never thus to the unbeliever.

The believer,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
arises in the happy heaven-world.

Monks, these verily
are the five advantages
for a believing clansman.

Monks, just as in some pleasant countryside,
where four main roads meet,
the great banyan tree is a haven of rest[2]
for all the winged creatures round about;
even so, monks,
the believing clansman is a haven of rest
for many folk,
for monks and nuns,
lay-disciples both men and women.

[35] Lo! as a mighty leaf-clad banyan[3] tree,
A fruitful bower of branches, trunks and roots,
For the winged creatures is a resting-place,
And birds come home to that fair haunt[4] for shade
And fruit, each finding there his meed and want:
So, to the virtuous, believing man,
Humble and docile,[5] genial, friendly, mild,
Come arahants, devoid of lust, delusion,
Devoid of hate, earth's fairest field for merit,
Who teach him Dhamma that dispels all Ill.

That Dhamma here he coming thus to know,
He rid of cankers waneth utterly.'[6]

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 79.

[2] Paṭisaraṇaṃ.

[3] Mahāduma, a great tree.

[4] This line is quoted and āyatana: haunt exegetically dealt with at Expos. 186; Vism. trsl. 569.

[5] Nivātavuttiṃ atthaddhaṃ; Cf. D. iii, 192. [DN 31 pg 184]

[6] Above, § 35.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 39

Putta Suttaṃ

They Desire a Son

---

[43] [35]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

'Seeing[1] five things, monks,
parents desire a son born in the family.

What five?

He that is holpen
he will help us;
for us he will do what must be done;
long will he keep up traditions;
worthily possess his heritage;
and make offerings to the petas when we are dead.

Monks, seeing these five things,
parents desire a son born in the family.

Wise folk who see these five desire a son:
Whoso is holpen, he will help; for us
He'll work, long the traditions keep,[2] fulfil His heritage and peta offerings make — Seeing these things the wise desire a son.
And the good and prudent, grateful and beholden,[3] [36] Cherish their parents, mindful[4] of the past;
They work for them as though it were a favour.
Who hearkens to instruction, holpen, helps,[5]
A son like that is praiseworthy indeed.'

---

[1] This sutta is quoted at Pts. of Contr. (the gāthā trsl. there is somewhat expanded). The five also recur at D. iii, 189 (trsl. omits fifth item).

[2] Tiṭṭhe. S.e. ṭhassati.

[3] Kataññū katavedino; see G.8. i, 78.

[4] Anussaraṃ. Comy. explains: ... anussarantā.

[5] Bhata-posī. Comy. yehi bhato tesaṃ posako.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
IV. Sumanā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IV: Sumanā

Sutta 40

Mahā Sāla Suttaṃ

Sal Trees

---

[44] [36]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] the great sāl trees,
supported by Himālaya,
the mountain king,
grow in five growths.

What five?

They grow in branches,
leaves and foliage;
they grow in bark;
in shoots;

in pith;
they grow in heart.

Monks, the great sāl trees,
supported by Himālaya,
the mountain king,
grow in these five growths.

Even so, monks,
folk within a home,
supported by a believing clan-chief,
grow in five growths.

What five?

They grow in faith,
in virtue,
in learning,
in charity,
they grow in insight.

Monks, folk within a home,
supported by a believing clan-chief,
grow in these five growths.

Where[2] rise Himālaya's rocky mountain slopes
The trees and forest-giants there find place
For growth amid the jungle's massy groves:
So in a virtuous, believing chief,
Wife, sons, kith, kin, friends, followers find place
For growth. The well-behaved, with wit to see,
Will emulate the virtues of that man,
[37] His liberal ways;[3] the way of Dhamma here
Will take which leads to heaven, and after dwell, Joying in joy of devas, happy, glad.'

---

[1] Cf. the whole sutta with A. i, 152 (G.S. i, 136); on sāl trees, see K.S. v, 266 n. These parts of a tree are stock; see above, § 25; M. i, 192; the five 'growths' for a layman recur below, § 46 f. and 63; in the 'Sevens' at A. iv, 4, D. iii, 163 as 'treasures.'

[2] I have ventured to translate this simile rather differently from G.S. loc. cit., following the prose. The gāthā does not bring in Himālaya, and A.A. ii, 252 on A. i merely remarks that selo means made of rock, but in Sanskrit the word has a definite connection with Himālaya; see Macdonell's Dict. s.v.; Buddhaghosa would probably not be aware of this; see P.E.D. and Dr. Stede's Afterword, p. 203.

[3] The last two lines of the text, recur at It. 112; with variation at A. ii, 62; the last pāda of the second line at It. 19; Thag. 242. (In the uddāna, with v.l. and S.e. we should read putta-sālehi, no doubt.)

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 41

Pañca Bhoga Ādiya Suttaṃ

On Getting Rich

---

[37]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
in Jeta Grove, at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there Anathapiṇḍika, the householder, came and visited him and,
after saluting,
sat down at one side.

So seated,
the Exalted One said to him:

'Householder, there are these five reasons for getting[1] rich.

What five?

Take[2] the case of an Ariyan disciple with riches gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,

justly obtained in a lawful way[3] —
he makes himself happy,
glad,
and keeps that great happiness,
he makes his parents happy,
glad,
and keeps them so;
he makes his wife and children,
glad,
and keeps them so;
he makes his slaves,
glad,
and keeps them so;
he makes work-folk and men,
glad,
and keeps them so.

This is the first reason for getting rich.

▪

Again, with riches gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained in a lawful way,
he makes his friends and companions happy,
glad,
and keeps them so.

This is the second reason for getting rich.

▪

Again, with riches gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,

justly obtained in a lawful way,
ill-luck from fire and water,
rajahs and robbers,
enemies and heirs[4] is warded off,
and he keeps his goods in safety.

This is the third reason for getting rich.

▪

Then, with riches gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained in a lawful way,
he makes the five oblations,[5]
that is to say:
oblations to kin,
guests,
petas,
rajahs
and devas.

This is the fourth reason for getting rich.

▪

[38] Moreover, householder, with riches gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained in a lawful way,
the Ariyan disciple institutes offerings,[6]
of lofty aim,
celestial,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
for all those recluses and godly men who abstain from pride and indolence, who bear all things in patience and humility,

each mastering self,
each calming self,
each perfecting self.

This is the fifth reason for getting rich.

Householder, there are these five reasons for getting rich.

§

Now, if the wealth of that Ariyan disciple, heeding these five reasons,
come to destruction,
let him consider thus:

"At least, I've heeded
those reasons for getting rich, but my wealth has gone!" —

thus he is not upset.

▪

And if his wealth increase,
let him think:

"Truly, I've heeded
those reasons for getting rich,
and my wealth has grown! —

thus he is not upset in either case.

"Bred,[7] borne and battened is my household all Upon my wealth; I've warded off ill-luck;
Made five oblations; furnished those good men.
Who lead the godly life composed, with gifts
And offerings of lofty aim; that meed,
The wealth wise householders should seek, by me
Is won — whatever befall there's no regret!"

Whoso considers thus, that man firm set
In Ariyan Dhamma here on earth they praise.
And afterwards in heaven he finds delight.

---

[1] Ādiya. P.E.D. (Ādiya[1]), no doubt because of the confusion of bhojanāni with bhogānaṃ of the text, wrongly derives this word. It is presumably the gerundive of ādiyati (P.E.D. Ādiya[4]). Comy. ādātabbakāraṇāni.

[2] Cf. the whole sutta with A. ii, 67; S. i, 90; below V, § 227; the Comy. refers to his remarks on A. ii.

[3] This passage recurs also at A. iv, 282.

[4] This is a stock set: M. i, 86; A. iv, 7.

[5] Bali.

[6] Dakkhiṇā; Cf. D. iii, 61; A. iv, 45 for this passage.

[7] Bhuttā bhogā bhatā bhaccā ... This gāthā recurs at A. ii, 67.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 42

Sappurisa Suttaṃ

The Good Man

---

[46] [38]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] when a good man is born into a family
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of many folk;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of his parents;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of of of his wife and children;

it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of his slaves, work-folk and men;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of of his friends and companions;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness
of recluses and brahmans.

▪

Monks, just as good rains bring to perfection
all crops
for the good,
welfare
and happiness of many folk;
even so a [39] good man is born into a family
for the good,
welfare
and happiness of many folk;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of his parents;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of of of his wife and children;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of of his slaves, work-folk and men;
it is for the good,
welfare
and happiness of of his friends and companions;
it is for the good,

welfare
and happiness
of recluses and brahmans.

For many let the good man wealth pursue.
Him Dhamma-warded doth a deva ward.
For him well taught, moral and dutiful,
Will honour never wane. On Dhamma standing, Virtuous, truth-speaking, conscientious,
Of such a man who's fit to appraise the worth?
'Tis even like red gold from Jambu's stream.
Him devas praise, by Brahma praised is he.'[2]

---

[1] Cf. the prose of this sutta with A. iv, 244.

[2] The third line of the text recurs at A. i, 162; the two last lines at Dhp. 230, A. ii, 8 and 29, and are quoted at Vism. 48. For the simile Cf. S. i, 65; M. iii, 102; A. i, 181; J. iv, 290.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 43

Pañca Iṭṭha-Dhamma Suttaṃ

What is Welcome

---

[47] [39]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī.

Then Anāthapiṇḍika, the householder, visited the Exalted One and,
saluting him,
sat down at one side;
and so seated,
the Exalted One spoke to him and said:

'There are these five things, householder,
which are welcome,
sought after,
lovely,
but hard to get in the world.

What five?

Long life, householder,
is welcome,

sought after,
lovely,
but hard to get in the world;

beauty, householder,
is welcome,
sought after,
lovely,
but hard to get in the world;

happiness, householder,
is welcome,
sought after,
lovely,
but hard to get in the world;

honour, householder,
is welcome,
sought after,
lovely,
but hard to get in the world;

the heaven-worlds, householder,
is welcome,
sought after,
lovely,
but hard to get in the world.

Such, householder, are the five things,
which are welcome,
sought after,
lovely,
but hard to get in the world.

§

Now these five things, householder, are not to be got either by vows
or prayers,
I declare;
for if they were,
why would anyone languish here?

§

To bring about long life, householder,
it is of no use for an Ariyan disciple,
yearning for long life,
either to pray for it
or to think much of it;
the way that leads[1] to long life
must be wayfared by the Ariyan disciple,
and when the way is wayfared by him,
it leads to the winning [40] of long life,
and he becomes a winner
both of heavenly life and human life.

▪

To bring about beauty, householder,
it is of no use for an Ariyan disciple,
yearning for beauty,
either to pray for it
or to think much of it;
the way that leads to beauty

must be wayfared by the Ariyan disciple,
and when the way is wayfared by him,
it leads to the winning of beauty,
and he becomes a winner
both of heavenly beauty and human beauty.

▪

To bring about happiness, householder,
it is of no use for an Ariyan disciple,
yearning for happiness,
either to pray for it
or to think much of it;
the way that leads to happiness
must be wayfared by the Ariyan disciple,
and when the way is wayfared by him,
it leads to the winning of happiness,
and he becomes a winner
both of heavenly happiness and human happiness.

▪

To bring about honour, householder,
it is of no use for an Ariyan disciple,
yearning for honour,
either to pray for it
or to think much of it;
the way that leads to honour
must be wayfared by the Ariyan disciple,
and when the way is wayfared by him,
it leads to the winning of honour,
and he becomes a winner
both of heavenly honour and human honour.

■

Householder, to bring about (life in) the heaven-worlds, it is of no use for an Axiyan disciple, yearning for heaven,
either to pray for it
or to think much of it;
the steps that lead to heaven must be stepped by the Ariyan disciple, and when those steps are stepped by him,
they lead to the winning of heaven,
and he becomes a winner of the heaven-worlds.

"Life,[2] beauty, honour, fame, high birth and heaven —
Whoso, day in day out, again, again,
Doth often pray for such, in him the wise
Zeal in the acts that make for good commend.
A twofold weal the wise, the zealous man attains:
Good here and good hereafter. "Wise and sage"
He's called who weal hath understood.'[3]

---

[1] Comy. observes: dāna-sīlādikā puñña-paṭipadā. Paṭipadā is the term used for the more usual, perhaps more genuine, Magga in the First (Benares) Utterance.

[2] Except for the first line, this gāthā recurs at S. i, 87; Cf. also 89; to suit the prose here I have varied the trsl. compared with K.S. i, 112, The last three lines of the text recur at It. 17, the last two at D.A. i, 32 (quoted), and the last at A. ii, 46.

[3] Atthābhisamayā. Comy. atthassa abhisamāgamena. See S.A. i, 156.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 44

Manāpadāyī Suttaṃ

The Giver of Good Things

---

[49] [40]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Vesāli,
at the Gabled Hall,
in Mahāvana.

Now the Exalted One,
robing himself before noon,
went to the house of Ugga,[1] the Vesāliyan householder,
and sat down on the seat ready there.

And Ugga, the Vesāliyan householder, approached the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated,
he said to the Exalted One:

'From the mouth of the Exalted One
have I heard this, lord;
from his own mouth have I received this:

"The giver of good[2] things
gains the good.

Lord, to me the gruel[3] from sāl [41] flowers
is good eating;
let the Exalted One accept some from me
out of pity.'

The Exalted One accepted
out of pity.

▪

'From the mouth of the Exalted One
have I heard this, lord;
from his own mouth
have I received this:

"The giver of good things
gains the good.

Lord, to me the flesh of pigs[4] with plenty of jujube fruit
is good eating;
let the Exalted One accept some from me
out of pity.'

The Exalted One accepted
out of pity.

▪

'From the mouth of the Exalted One
have I heard this, lord;
from his own mouth
have I received this:

"The giver of good things
gains the good.

Lord, to me the oily tube-like vegetable[5]
is good eating;
let the Exalted One accept some from me
out of pity.'

The Exalted One accepted
out of pity.

▪

'From the mouth of the Exalted One
have I heard this, lord;
from his own mouth
have I received this:

"The giver of good things
gains the good.

Lord, to me a mess of rice,
cleaned of black grains, served with assorted curries and condiments[6]
is good eating;
let the Exalted One accept some from me
out of pity.'

The Exalted One accepted
out of pity.

▪

'From the mouth of the Exalted One
have I heard this, lord;
from his own mouth
have I received this:

"The giver of good things
gains the good.

Lord, to me good is muslins from Benares
let the Exalted One accept some from me
out of pity.'

The Exalted One accepted
out of pity.

▪

'From the mouth of the Exalted One
have I heard this, lord;
from his own mouth
have I received this:

"The giver of good things
gains the good.

Lord, to me good is a couch[7]
with a fleecy cover,
woollen cloth or coverlet,
spread with rugs of deer-skins,
with awnings over it
and crimson cushions at either end,
and though we know, lord,
that it is not suitable[8] for the Exalted One:
this sandalwood plank of mine, worth more than a hundred thousand — yet let the Exalted One accept it out of pity.'

And the Exalted One accepted out of pity.

§

Then the Exalted One gave thanks to Ugga, the Vesāliyan, with this benediction:

'Who gives the good shall gain the good; he who
To upright men gives willingly clothes, bed, Food, drink, the needful requisites; and what's Foregone, put by, obsesses[9] not the mind.
[42] Whoso in arahants doth find a field
For gifts, wise man, foregoing what is hard,
In giving thus, the good shall gain the good.'

§

And when the Exalted One had thus given thanks to Ugga, the Vesāliyan he rose from his seat and departed.

Now in due course
Ugga the householder died and thereafter arose in a certain inferable world.[10]

At that time the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
and there,
when the night was far spent,

Ugga the deva,
in lovely radiance,
lighting up the whole of Jeta Grove,
came and visited him and,
after saluting,
stood at one side.

And the Exalted One spoke to him,
standing there,
saying:

'I hope, Ugga, things are with you
as we hoped?

To be sure, lord,[11]
things are as the Exalted One hoped.'

Then the Exalted One addressed this verse to Ugga, the deva:

'Who gives the good shall gain the good; who gives
The best shall best receive again; the choice,
The choice receive; the chief, the chief place win.
Who gives the best, the choice, the chief — that man Has honour and long life wherever he rise.'[12]

---

[1] See G.S. i, 23; A. iv, 208 f.

[2] Manāpa, more usually translated lovely, as in § 43 above.

[3] Comy. calls it yāgu and says it is made by cooking stalks, leaves and filament with cumin seed in ghee. The Sinhalese today seem to use the nuts and bark of the sal tree, but not to make a gruel.

[4] Sūkara-maṃsa. Comy. pickled one-year-old pig's flesh with sweet-tasting jujube fruit and cumin condiment. Cf. D. ii, 127 and trsl. 137 n. on sūkara-māddava.

[5] Nibbaddhatelakaṃ nāliyāsākaṃ. S.e. with v.l. nibbatta-. Comy. nibaddha, glossing: vinivaṭṭita-. This may be 'ladies' fingers,' Sinh. baṇḍakka.

[6] This is a stock phrase; Cf. D. i, 105; M. i, 31; A. iv, 231, etc.

[7] Cf. D. i, 7, Vin. i, 192, etc.

[8] Cf. M. ii, 118. Comy. observes that this plank was not very big, being two and a half cubits long and one and a half across.

[9] The text reads anuggahītaṃ, but with S.e, and Comy. we should read anaggahītaṃ, from aggaṇhati (a √grah, not in P.E.D., but see Tr. Dict. s.v.). Comy. observes; anupekkha-cittataya cittena na aggahītan ti. Cf. below V, § 148.

[10] [1] Mano-mayaṃ kāyaṃ. Kāya is frequently used for nikāya; Cf. S. i, 27 (K.S. i, 37). Or it may be the body of him that is to be inferred — viz., from his visit.

[11] S.e. so, but our text and Comy. omit.

[12] This line of the text recurs above, § 37.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 45

Yields in Merit

---

[51] [42]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] there are these five yields in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,

to good
and to happiness.

What five?

Monks, whose robe a monk enjoys the use of,
while entering [43] and abiding in limitless mind-concentration - unto him shall come
unlimited yield in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness.

▪

Monks, whose alms a monk enjoys the use of,
while entering and abiding in limitless mind-concentration -
unto him shall come
unlimited yield in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness.

▪

Monks, whose lodging a monk enjoys the use of,
while entering and abiding in limitless mind-concentration -
unto him shall come
unlimited yield in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness.

▪

Monks, whose bed and bench a monk enjoys the use of,
while entering and abiding in limitless mind-concentration -
unto him shall come
unlimited yield in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness.

▪

Monks, whose medicaments for sickness a monk enjoys the use of,
while entering and abiding in limitless mind-concentration -
unto him shall come
unlimited yield in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness.

▪

Monks, these are the five yields in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness.

§

Monks, of the Ariyan disciple, endowed with these five yields in merit,

yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness,
it is not easy to grasp the measure of merit
and to say:

Thus much is the yield in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness,
but this great mass of merit is reckoned incalculable,
immeasurable.

▪

Monks, just as it is not easy to grasp[2] the amount of water in the mighty ocean and to say:

There are so many[3] pailfuls of water, or hundreds of pailfuls,
or thousands of pailfuls,
or hundreds of thousands of pailfuls of water,

but the great mass of water is just reckoned incalculable,
immeasurable;
even so, monks, it is not easy to grasp the measure of merit
of the Ariyan disciple
endowed with these five yields of merit and goodness,
and to say:

Thus much is the yield in merit,
yields in goodness,
the food of happiness,
heavenly,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
conducive to what is welcome,
sought after,
to the lovely,
to good
and to happiness,
but this great mass of merit is reckoned incalculable,
immeasurable.

Vast deeps immeasurable, fearsome pool,
The oozy home of sumless treasuries[4]-
There flow the rivers, there to meet the sea, [44] Serving the needs of countless hosts of men:[5] -
And to that man, wise almoner, who gives Food, drink, clothes, bed, seat, mat, comes meed in torrents, As rivers, bringing water, to the sea.'

---

[1] Comy. refers to A. ii, 54; [AN 4.51 Woodward] where the whole sutta occurs, except that here lodging (senāsana) is expanded into lodging (vihāra) and bed and chair (mañcapīthaṃ), thus making the five heads required. Cf. also A. iv, 245 [AN 8.39 Hare]; S. v, 391; [SN 5.55.31 Woodward].

[2] Our text and S.e. gahetuṃ; S. v, 400 gaṇetuṃ.

[3] Our text should read udakālhakānī ti; see Rhys Davids' Coins and Measures of Ceylon, p. 19 f. S. v, trsl. gallon, but it seems to be more than that. For the simile see below VI, § 37.

[4] Ratanagaṇanaṃ ālayaṃ (from √li, to stick); cf. Henry V, I, ii, 165.

[5] Our text reads maccha-, fish, but all other texts nara.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 46

Pañca Sampadā Suttaṃ

The Perfectings[1]

---

[53] [44]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five perfectings.

What five?

The perfecting of faith,
of virtue, of learning,
of charity
and the perfecting of insight.[2]

Verily, monks, these are the five perfectings.

---

[1] [2] Cf. above, § 40.

[2] Sampadā, or accomplishments or achievements. 'Charity' is literally 'giving' (dana); is in no way connected with love (agapē).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 47

Pañca Dhana Suttaṃ

Treasures

---

[53] [44]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

'There are these five treasures, monks.

What five?

The treasure of faith,
of virtue,
of learning,

of charity
and of insight.[1]

§

And what, monks, is the treasure of faith?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has faith;
he believes thus of the tathagata's awakening: -

Of a truth he is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully awakened,
adept in knowledge and conduct,
well going,
a world-knower,
incomparable,
tamer of tamable men,
among devas and men the teacher,
Buddha,
Exalted One.

This, monks, is called
the treasure of faith.

▪

And what, monks, is the treasure of virtue?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple abstains from taking life,[ed1]
from taking what is not given,
from carnal lusts,
from lying,

abstains from taking sloth-causing liquors,
spirits,
wines.

This, monks, is called
the treasure of virtue.

▪

And what, monks, is the treasure of learning?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has learning and a memory, retentive and well stored[ed2]
and those things,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in meaning and detail the godly life,
wholly fulfilled,
perfectly pure;
all those are heard much by him,
retained in mind,
familiarized by talk,
pored over,
well penetrated by right view.

This, monks, is
the treasure of learning.

▪

And what, monks, is the treasure of charity?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple,
living the householder's life,
is free in heart

from the stain of avarice;
given over to charity,
open-handed,
delighting in making presents,
he is [45] ready to comply with another's request and finds pleasure in alms giving.

This, monks, is called
the treasure of charity.

▪

And what, monks, is the treasure of insight?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple has insight;
he possesses insight
into the way of growth and decay,
and Ariyan penetration into the way
to the utter destruction of Ill.

This, monks, is called the treasure of insight.

These, monks, are verily the five treasures.

Faith[2] in the Tathāgata, unshaken, firm;
Fair virtue, praised and loved by Ariyans;
Serenity[3] in seeing upright men
And in the Order — he whose way is thus,
No beggar is he called, nor vain his life.
Wherefore faith, virtue and serenity,
Wise men, discerning Dhamma, e'er pursue, Remembering the message Buddhas bring.'

[1] Cf. G.S. i, 190, D. i, 163, and A. iv, 4 for seven. The text is thus abbreviated.

[2] This gātihā recurs at S. i, 232; v, 384; A. ii, 67; Th. i, 506-9; for the last three lines of the text Cf. A. iv, 4.

[3] Or satisfaction; pasāda; see note to S. i, trsl., and Bu.'s gloss given there. I follow the more literal meaning.

[ed1] Hare abbreviates here but there is not one case where he has translated the virtues in full. The missing lines (on taking what is not given, 'carnal lusts' and lying — adinnādānā paṭivirato hoti, kāmesumicchācārā paṭivirato hoti, musā-vādā paṭivirato hoti) are supplied from Volume III of the G.S., translated by Woodward.

[ed2] Hare abbreviates here and in G.S. 7.6 translates differently. I have adapted his translation there to his translation here.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 48

Alabbha-Nīyaṭhāna Suttaṃ

States Not To Be Got To

---

[54] [45]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five states[1]
not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

What five?

Where ageing brings no old age —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where sickening brings no sickness —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where dying death —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where wasting destruction —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra

or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

■

Where ending brings the end —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

§

Monks, to the unlearned,
average man,
ageing brings old age;
and when he is old,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does ageing bring old age,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
ageing brings old age:
and if, when old age comes,
I should [46] mourn[2] and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;

food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,[3]
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when old age comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

§

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man, sickening brings sickness;
and when he is sick,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does sickening brings sickness,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
sickening brings sickness:
and if, when sickness comes,

I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when sickness comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
dying brings death;
and when he is dying,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does dying bring death,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,

dying brings death:
and if, when dying comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when dying comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
wasting brings destruction;
and when he is wasting,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does wasting bring destruction,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on

and an arising of creatures,
to all,
wasting brings destruction:
and if, when wasting comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when wasting comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
ending brings the end;
and when the end is near,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does ending bring the end,

but wheresoever there is a coming and going of creatures,
a passing on
and an arising,
to all, ending brings the end;
and if, when the end is near,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when the end is near,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

§

So also, to the learned Ariyan disciple,
ageing brings old age;

but when he is old,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does ageing bring old age,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
ageing brings old age:
and if, when old age comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when age comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn[4] out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,

dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
sickening brings sickness;
but when he is sick,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does sickening brings sickness,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
sickening brings sickness:
and if, when sickness comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when sickness comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
dying brings death;
but when he is dying,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does dying brings death,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
dying brings death:
and if, when dying comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when dying comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
wasting brings destruction;
but when wasting comes,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does wasting brings destruction,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
wasting brings destruction:
and if, when wasting comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail

and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when wasting comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Monks, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
ending brings the end;
and when the end is near,
he reflects:

"Not to me only
does ending bring the end,

but wheresoever there is a coming and going of creatures,
a passing on
and an arising,
to all, ending brings the end;
and if, when the end is near,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

Monks, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
[47] is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled[5] the self entirely.

Monks, these are the five states
not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

§

Grieve[6] not, nor weep! It profits[7] not, e'en not a whit.
And enemies rejoice to see one's grief and pain;
But when the sage, skilled in the quest of good, ne'er quakes
Beneath misfortune's blows, his enemies are pained,
Seeing his face of old unchanged. By chant and charm,[8]
Well-worded speech, gifts and by customs rightly kept,
Where and whatever good may gotten be, just there
Let him exert himself for that. And when he knows:[9]
Neither by me nor other may this good be won — Ungrieving, bearing all things, let him think: How now, How shall I best apply my strength to what's at hand?'

---

[1] Ṭhānāni Comy. glosses: kāraṇāni.

[2] Cf. Vism. 529; most of this is stock.

[3] This phrase recurs at It. 76, of a deva.

[4] For this simile Cf. Th. i, 404; Sn. 939; M. ii, 256.

[5] Parinibbāpeti.

[6] This gāthā recurs at J. iii, 204 (Pañcanipāta) with some v.l. Comy. differs from Mp. It recurs in the Chinese version of Sn.; see J.P.T.S., 1906-7, p. 51.

[7] Attho. J. Comy. vaḍhi.

[8] Japena mantena {S.e. and Mp. jappena). J. comy. mantaparijapanena; paṇḍitehi saddhiṃ mantagahaṇena. Mp. vaṇṇabhaṇanena; mahā- nubhāvamattaparivattanena.

[9] S.e. and J. yato ca jāneyya for sac'eva ... of our text.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 49

Kosala Suttaṃ

The Kosalan

---

[57] [47]

Thus have I heard:

Once while the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park
rajah Pasenadi,[1] the Kosalan, paid him a visit and, after saluting,
sat down at one side.

Now at that time Mallikā, the ranee, died.

Then a man approached rajah Pasenadi and whispered in his ear:

'Sire, the ranee Mallikā is dead.'

[48] And when the rajah heard this,
he was sorely grieved
and sick at heart,
his shoulders drooped,

his mouth fell
and he sat brooding,
unable to speak.[2]

And the Exalted One, seeing him sorely grieved
and sick at heart,
his shoulders drooping,
his mouth fallen
and sitting brooding,
unable to speak,
spoke to him and said;

'There are, Maharajah, five states not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

What five?

Where ageing brings no old age —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where sickening brings no sickness —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra

or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where dying death —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where wasting destruction —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where ending brings the end —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

§

Maharajah, to the unlearned,
average man,
ageing brings old age;
and when he is old,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does ageing bring old age,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
ageing brings old age:
and if, when old age comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when old age comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;

pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

§

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man, sickening brings sickness;
and when he is sick,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does sickening brings sickness,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
sickening brings sickness:
and if, when sickness comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when sickness comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,

beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
dying brings death;
and when he is dying,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does dying bring death,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
dying brings death:
and if, when dying comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when dying comes,
he mourns,
pines,

weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
wasting brings destruction;
and when he is wasting,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does wasting bring destruction,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
wasting brings destruction:
and if, when wasting comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when wasting comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
ending brings the end;
and when the end is near,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does ending bring the end,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going of creatures,
a passing on
and an arising,
to all, ending brings the end;
and if, when the end is near,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when the end is near,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

§

So also, to the learned Ariyan disciple,
ageing brings old age;
but when he is old,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does ageing bring old age,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
ageing brings old age:
and if, when old age comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,

ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when age comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
sickening brings sickness;
but when he is sick,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does sickening brings sickness,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,

to all,
sickening brings sickness:
and if, when sickness comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when sickness comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
dying brings death;

but when he is dying,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does dying brings death,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
dying brings death:
and if, when dying comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when dying comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,

dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
wasting brings destruction;
but when wasting comes,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does wasting brings destruction,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
wasting brings destruction:
and if, when wasting comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when wasting comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
ending brings the end;
and when the end is near,
he reflects:

"Not to me only
does ending bring the end,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going of creatures,
a passing on
and an arising,
to all, ending brings the end;
and if, when the end is near,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

Maharajah, these are the five states
not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

§

Grieve not, nor weep! It profits not, e'en not a whit.
And enemies rejoice to see one's grief and pain;
But when the sage, skilled in the quest of good, ne'er quakes
Beneath misfortune's blows, his enemies are pained,
Seeing his face of old unchanged. By chant and charm,
Well-worded speech, gifts and by customs rightly kept,
Where and whatever good may gotten be, just there
Let him exert himself for that. And when he knows:
Neither by me nor other may this good be won —
Ungrieving, bearing all things, let him think: How now,
How shall I best apply my strength to what's at hand?'

[1] He was the same age as the Buddha (F. Dial. ii, 66). See K.S. i, 93 ff. for a whole set of suttas giving conversations he had with the B.; on Mallikā, p. 101 and n.; at A. iv, 348, her name appears in the list of upāsikās. For Kosala generally see C.H.I. i, 178-82.

[2] This is stock; see Vin. iii, 162 and references given at K.S. i, 155; here Comy. pattakkhandho-ti, patita-.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
V: Muṇḍa-Rāja Vagga

The Book of the Fives

V. Rajah Muṇḍa

Sutta 50

Nārada Suttaṃ

The Venerable Nārada

---

[57] [48]

Thus have I heard:

One time the venerable Nārada[1] dwelt near Pāṭaliputta,[2]
in the Cock's Park.[3]

Now at that time Bhaddā, the dear and beloved ranee of rajah Muṇḍa,[4] died;
and because of the loss of his dear ranee, Bhaddā,
he neither bathed,
nor anointed himself,
nor partook of any food,
nor concerned himself with any affairs, but day and night
clung in grief to her body
as though a-swoon.

▪

After a while he summoned his treasurer, Piyaka,
and said to him:

'Prythee, friend Piyaka, place the body of the ranee, Bhaddā,
in an oil vessel made of iron and cover it over with another iron vessel,[5] so that we shall see her body longer.'

'Yes, sire,' Hyaka replied,
and he placed the body of the ranee, Bhaddā,
in an oil vessel made of iron and covered it over with another iron vessel.

▪

Now Piyaka, the treasurer, thought to himself:

Bhaddā,
the dear, beloved ranee of rajah Muṇḍa, is dead;
and because of this [49] loss,
the rajah not even bathes or anoints himself,
nor eats food,
nor concerns himself with his affairs,
but clings in grief to her body
as though a-swoon.[6]

What if rajah Muṇḍa go
and wait upon some recluse or godly man!

When he had learnt Dhamma,
he would pluck out the dart of sorrow.

▪

And again he thought:

'Near Pāṭaliputta,
in the Cock's Park,

dwells this venerable Nārada;
and of that same reverend sir this fair report is gone abroad:

"A sage is he,
accomplished,
wise,
learned,
an able speaker,
of ready, gracious wit,
both venerable
and arahant.[7]

Methinks, if rajah Muṇḍa were to go and wait upon the venerable Nārada, perhaps, after listening to the venerable one's Dhamma,
he would pluck out the dart of sorrow.

▪

So Piyaka, the treasurer, approached the rajah and said to him:

'Sire, this venerable Nārada dwells hard by Pāṭaliputta,
in the Cock's Park;
now of him a fair report has gone abroad,
that he is a sage,
accomplished,
wise,
learned,
an able speaker,
of ready, gracious wit,
both venerable
and arahant.

Maybe, if my lord were to go and wait upon the venerable one,
he could,

after listening to the venerable Nārada's Dhamma, pluck out the dart of sorrow.'

'Very well, friend Piyaka, announce (my coming) to the venerable Nārada.'

And he thought:

How, I wonder,
ought one like me
to approach a recluse or godly man, previously unknown,
dwelling in the kingdom?

'Yes, sire,' he replied;
and Piyaka, the treasurer,
went and visited the venerable Nārada and saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated,
he spoke thus to the venerable one:

'Reverend sir, Bhaddā, the dear and beloved ranee of rajah has died;
and because of his loss
the rajah neither bathes nor anoints himself,
,
nor eats food,
nor concerns himself with his affairs,
but [50] clings in grief to her body
as though a-swoon.

Good it were, reverend sir,
if the venerable Nārada were to teach such Dhamma that rajah Muṇḍa, having heard, might pluck out the dart of sorrow.'

'Now is the time, Piyaka, for the rajah Muṇḍa to do as he thinks fit.'

▪

Then Piyaka, the treasurer, got up from his seat, saluted the venerable Nārada
and took his leave,
keeping the venerable one on his right;
and approaching the rajah,
he said to him:

'Sire, I have made occasion with the venerable Nārada;
sire, now is the time to do as you think fit.'

'Then, friend Piyaka, have our state carriages got ready.'

'Yes, sire,' he replied;
and when he had done so,
he told the rajah:

'Sire, the state carriages await you.'

▪

Then rajah Muṇḍa got up into a state carriage and with many others went off in royal pomp and power to see the venerable Nārada at the Cock's Park.

And having gone by carriage as far as the ground allowed,
he got down and entered the Park on foot.[8]

And the rajah Muṇḍa approached the venerable Nārada,
saluted him

and sat down at one side;
and the venerable Nārada spoke thus to him,
so seated:

§

'There are, Maharajah, five states not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

What five?

Where ageing brings no old age —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where sickening brings no sickness —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where dying death —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where wasting destruction —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

▪

Where ending brings the end —
that state is not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

§

Maharajah, to the unlearned,
average man,
ageing brings old age;
and when he is old,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does ageing bring old age,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
ageing brings old age:
and if, when old age comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when old age comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

§

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man, sickening brings sickness;
and when he is sick,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does sickening brings sickness,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
sickening brings sickness:
and if, when sickness comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when sickness comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
dying brings death;
and when he is dying,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does dying bring death,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
dying brings death:
and if, when dying comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when dying comes,
he mourns,
pines,
weeps,
wails,

beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
wasting brings destruction;
and when he is wasting,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does wasting bring destruction,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
wasting brings destruction:
and if, when wasting comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when wasting comes,
he mourns,
pines,

weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

▪

Again, monks, to the unlearned, average man,
ending brings the end;
and when the end is near,
he reflects not thus:

"Not to me only
does ending bring the end,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going of creatures,
a passing on
and an arising,
to all, ending brings the end;
and if, when the end is near,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when the end is near,
he mourns,

pines,
weeps,
wails,
beats his breast
and falls into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
an unlearned average man;
pierced by the poisoned dart of sorrow,
he just torments himself.

§

So also, to the learned Ariyan disciple,
ageing brings old age;
but when he is old,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does ageing bring old age,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
ageing brings old age:
and if, when old age comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,

enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when age comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
sickening brings sickness;
but when he is sick,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does sickening brings sickness,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
sickening brings sickness:

and if, when sickness comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when sickness comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
dying brings death;
but when he is dying,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does dying brings death,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
dying brings death:
and if, when dying comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when dying comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
wasting brings destruction;
but when wasting comes,
he does reflect:

"Not to me only
does wasting brings destruction,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going,
a passing on
and an arising of creatures,
to all,
wasting brings destruction:
and if, when wasting comes,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

And when wasting comes,
he does not mourn
nor pine
nor weep
nor wail
nor beat his breast
nor fall into distraction.

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out

is the poisoned dart of sorrow
with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

▪

Again, monks, to the learned Ariyan disciple
ending brings the end;
and when the end is near,
he reflects:

"Not to me only
does ending bring the end,
but wheresoever there is a coming and going of creatures,
a passing on
and an arising,
to all, ending brings the end;
and if, when the end is near,
I should mourn and pine,
weep and wail
and beat the breast
and fall into distraction;
food would not please me,
ugliness would come upon my body,
affairs would be neglected,
enemies would rejoice,
while friends would grieve."

Maharajah, this man is called
a learned Ariyan disciple;
drawn out
is the poisoned dart of sorrow

with which the unlearned average man
torments himself;
the sorrowless,
dart-free,
Ariyan disciple
has cooled the self entirely.

Maharajah, these are the five states
not to be got to
by recluse or godly man,
by deva,
Māra
or Brahmā,
nor by anyone in the world.

§

Grieve not, nor weep! It profits not, e'en not a whit.
And enemies rejoice to see one's grief and pain;
But when the sage, skilled in the quest of good, ne'er quakes
Beneath misfortune's blows, his enemies are pained,
Seeing his face of old unchanged. By chant and charm,
Well-worded speech, gifts and by customs rightly kept,
Where and whatever good may gotten be, just there
Let him exert himself for that. And when he knows:
Neither by me nor other may this good be won —
Ungrieving, bearing all things, let him think: How now,
How shall I best apply my strength to what's at hand?'

§

And when he had thus spoken,
rajah Muṇḍa said to the venerable Nārada:

'What, reverend sir, is this discourse of Dhamma called?'

'It is called, Maharajah, the Plucker Out of Sorrow's Dart.'

In sooth, reverend sir, it is a very plucker out of sorrow's dart;
in very sooth, reverend sir,
it is a plucker out of sorrow's dart;
for by me, who have heard this discourse of Dhamma, is sorrow's dart plucked out.'

Then rajah Muṇḍa summoned Piyaka, the treasurer,
and said:

'Burn now, friend Piyaka,
the body of the ranee, Bhadda,
and build a cairn[9] for it;
henceforth now we will bathe and anoint ourselves,
eat food
and go about our business.'

---

[1] Except here and at K.S. ii, 81 f., where he declares himself not arahant, I find no mention of him. Our Comy. is silent.

[2] Or Patna, the capital of Magadha; see Buddh. India, 262; D. ii, 87.

[3] See K.S. v, 14; F.Dial. i, 251. Here later Asoka built a monastery for 1,000 monks, C.H.I. i, 518; Watters, Chwang, ii, 98; Beals' Records, ii, 94.

[4] C.H.I. i, 189; Mhvs. trsl. 19: great-grandson of Ajātasattu, rājā of Magadha, a parricide; he does not seem to be mentioned elsewhere.

[5] Similarly for a cakkavattin and the Buddha see D. ii, 142 and 162; see Dial. ii, 155 n.

[6] Ajjhomucchito. Comy. swallowing and ending (in a faint)—(but I do not think the sense warrants such a literal interpretation; see Tr. Dict.; surely we should read -niṭṭhāpetvā) — possessed by ravening, excessive infatuation and craving.

[7] Vuddho c'eva arahā ca, aged and worthy; see note 3, p. 48; [n.1 here] omitting these last two terms, the phrase recurs at S. iv, 375.

[8] These expressions are stock; Cf. D. ii, 73; A. iv. 181; v. 05.

[9] Thūpa, dāgoba.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 51

Nīvaraṇa Suttaṃ

A Check

---

[63] [51]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

'There are, monks, these five checks,
hindrances,
which overspread the heart,
which weaken insight.

What five?

Sensual desire, monks,
is a check,
a hindrance,

which overspreads the heart,
which weakens insight;

ill-wlll, monks,
is a check,
a hindrance,
which overspreads the heart,
which weakens insight;

sloth and torpor, monks,
is a check,
a hindrance,
which overspreads the heart,
which weakens insight;

flurry and worry, monks,
is a check,
a hindrance,
which overspreads the heart,
which weakens insight;

doubt, monks,
is a check,
a hindrance,
which overspreads the heart,
which weakens insight.'[1]

[52] These, monks, are the five checks,
hindrances,
which overspread the heart,
which weaken insight.

§

Monks, that a monk, verily,
without being rid of those five checks,
hindrances,
which overspread the heart,
which weaken insight,
without strength
and weak in insight,
shall know his own good,
shall know another's good,
shall know the good of both,
or shall realize the excellence[2]
of knowledge and insight
proper to Ariyans,
which goes beyond man's conditions —
that cannot be.

▪

Monks, suppose in the case of a mountain stream,[3] winding here and there,
swiftly flowing,
taking all along with it,
a man were to open watercourses[4] into it from both sides;
then indeed, monks,
the flow in mid-stream would be disturbed, swirled about
and diverted,[5]
nor would the stream
wind here and there,
nor flow swiftly,
nor take all along with it:

▪

Even so, monks, that a monk
without being rid of those five checks,

hindrances,
which overspread the heart,
which weaken insight,
without strength
and weak in insight,
shall know his own good,
shall know another's good,
shall know the good of both,
or shall realize the excellence
of knowledge and insight
proper to Ariyans,
which goes beyond man's conditions —
that cannot be.

§

Monks, that a monk, being rid of these five checks,
hindrances,
which overspread the heart,
which weaken insight,
strong and with insight,
shall know his own good,
shall know another's good,
shall know the good of both,
or shall realize the excellence
of knowledge and insight
proper to Ariyans,
which goes beyond man's conditions —
that surely shall be.

■

Monks, suppose in the case of a mountain stream,
winding here and there,
swiftly flowing,
taking all along with it,
a man were to close the watercourses on both sides of it;
then indeed, monks,
the flow in mid-stream would not be disturbed,
swirled about
or diverted,
but the stream would wind here and there,
flow swiftly forward,
taking all along with it:

▪

Even so, monks, that a monk, rid of these five checks,
hindrances [53],
which overspread the heart,
which weaken insight,
strong and with insight,
shall know his own good,
shall know another's good,
shall know the good of both,
or shall realize the excellence
of knowledge and insight
proper to Ariyans,
which goes beyond man's conditions —
that surely shall be.'

---

[1] Cf. S. v, 96; D. i, 246; A. iv, 457, DhS. trsl. 310.

[2] Cf. G.S. i, 7; S. iv, 300; AA. i, 58.

[3] Cf. A. iv, 137; Vism. 231.

[4] Naṅgala-mukhāni. Comy. mātikā-, explaining: tāni hi naṅgala-sarikkhattā naṅgalehi ca katattā naṅngalamukhānī ti vuccanti.

[5] Vyādinno, no doubt for vyādiñño with Comy.; S.e. byādinno.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 52

Akusala-Rāsi Suttaṃ

The Heap

---

[65] [53]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

'"Tis[1] a heap of bad things!" monks;
and in saying this of the five hindrances,
one would speak rightly.

Indeed, monks, the whole
is a heap of bad things,
that is to say:
the five hindrances.

What five?

The hindrance of sensual desire,
the hindrance of ill-will,
the hindrance of sloth and torpor,
the hindrance of flurry and worry,
the hindrance of doubt.

"Tis a heap of bad things!" monks;
and in saying this of the five hindrances,
one would speak rightly.

Indeed, monks, the whole
is a heap of bad things,
that is to say:
the five hindrances.'

---

[1] This recurs at S. v, 145; for akusalarāsi trsl. there has 'heap of demerit.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 53

Padhāniy-Aṅga Suttaṃ

The Limbs

---

[65] [53]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five limbs of striving.[1]

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk has faith,
he believes in the enlightenment of the Tathāgata:
"Of a truth he is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
abounding in wisdom and right,

the well-gone,
the world-knower,
the incomparable tamer of tamable men,
the teacher of devas and men,
the Buddha, the Exalted One";

he has health and well-being,
a good digestion,
which is neither over-cold
nor overheated,[2]
but even
and suitable for striving;

he is neither deceitful
nor a make-believe,
but declares himself to the Master
or to his wise fellows in the godly life
just as he really is;

he lives striving hard
to give up evil things,
and to hold to good things;
staunch and strong in effort,
he shirks not the burden of righteousness;

he has insight
and is endowed therewith
into the way of the rise and fall of things,
with Ariyan penetration
into the utter destruction of Ill.

These, monks, are the five limbs of striving.'

---

[1] This recurs at D. iii, 237; M. ii, 95, 128; A. v, 15; below V, § 135.

[2] Comy. observes that a digestion that is over-cold is 'cold-shy,' and similarly for the over-heated.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 54

Asamaya - Samaya Suttaṃ

Times for Striving

---

[65] [54]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

Monks, there are these five wrong[1] times for striving.

What five?

Herein a monk is old,
overcome by old age.

Monks, this is the first wrong time for striving.

▪

A monk is ill,
overcome by illness.

Monks, this is the second wrong time for striving.

▪

There[2] is a famine,
crops are bad,
food is hard to get
and it is not easy to keep oneself going by gleaning and favours.

Monks, this is the third wrong time for striving.

▪

Fear is about,
perils [3] of robbers,
and the country-folk mount their carts
and drive away.

Monks, this is the fourth wrong time for striving.

▪

Again, monks,[4] the Order is rent;
then there is reviling between one another,
accusation between one another,
quarrelling between one another,
repudiation between one another;
and they of little faith
do not find faith there
and the faithful
become otherwise.

Monks, this is the fifth wrong time for striving.

Monks, these are the five wrong times for striving.

§

Monks, there are these five right times for striving.

What five?

Herein a monk is young,
a mere youth,
black-haired
and blessed with the beauty of youth,
the heyday of youth.[5]

Monte, this is the first right time for striving.

▪

A monk has health
and well-being,
a good digestion,
which is neither over-cold
nor over-heated,
but even
and suitable for striving.

Monks, this is the second right time for striving.

▪

There is no famine
and crops are good,

food is easy to get,
[55] and it is easy to keep oneself going
by gleanings and favours.

Monks, this is the third right time for striving.

▪

Men dwell in friendly fellowship together,
as mingled milk and water,
nor quarrel,
but look upon one another with friendly eye.[6]

Monks, this is the fourth right time for striving.

▪

Again, monks, the Order dwell in friendly fellowship together, finding comfort in one teaching;[7]
when there is harmony in the Order, then there is no reviling one with another,
nor accusation made,
nor quarrelling,
nor repudiation between one another,
but there they of little faith find faith
and the faith of the faithful is made become more.[8]

Monks, this is the fifth right time for striving.

Monks, these are the five right times for striving.'

---

[1] Asamaya, unseasonable.

[2] Cf. Vin. iii, 145.

[3] The text reads aṭavi-saṃkhepo, v.l. and S.e. -saṃkopo? from √KUP, the wrath of robbers. The whole phrase is stock; Cf. A. i, 178 (G.S. i, 161), and below V, § 78.

[4] This section recurs at It. 11 almost word for word. Cf. below V, § 156.

[5] This is stock; see D. i, 115; M. ii, 66; S. i, 9; A. ii, 22.

[6] See M. ii, 120; S. iv, 225; A. i, 70, more often of monks.

[7] Ekuddesu phāsu.

[8] Cf. below V, § 156; It. 12.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 55

Mātā-Putta Suttaṃ

Mother and Son

---

[67] [55]

Thus have I heard:

Once when the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī;
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
a mother and son[1]
were both spending the rainy season in Sāvatthī,
as monk and nun.

They longed to see one another often;
the mother often wished for her son,
the son his mother.

And from seeing each other often,
companionship arose;
from companionship,
intimacy;
from intimacy,
amorousness;[2]
and without giving up the training[3]

and making their weakness manifest,
with their hearts inflamed,
they gave themselves over
to incestuous intercourse.

▪

And a company of monks went to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side;
and, so seated,
they said this to the Exalted:

Herein, Lord, a mother and son
were both spending the rainy season in Sāvatthī,
as monk and nun.

They longed to see one another often;
the mother often wished for her son,
the son his mother.

And from seeing each other often,
companionship arose;
from companionship,
intimacy;
from intimacy,
amorousness;
and without giving up the training
and making their weakness manifest,
with their hearts inflamed,
they gave themselves over
to incestuous intercourse.

▪

'What, monks,
knows not this foolish man

that a mother shall not lust after her son, nor son, verily, after his mother?

§

[56] Monks, I see no other single form so enticing,
so desirable,
so intoxicating,
so binding,
so distracting,[4]
such a hindrance to winning the unsurpassed peace from effort —
that is to say, monks,
as a woman's form.

Monks, whosoever clings to a woman's form — infatuated,
greedy,
fettered,
enslaved,
enthralled[5] —
for many a long day shall grieve,
snared by the charms
of a woman's form.

▪

Monks, I know no other single sound so enticing,
so desirable,
so intoxicating,
so binding,
so distracting,
such a hindrance to winning

the unsurpassed peace from effort —
that is to say, monks,
as a woman's sound.

Monks, whosoever clings to a woman's sound — infatuated,
greedy,
fettered,
enslaved,
enthralled —
for many a long day shall grieve,
snared by the charms
of a woman's sound.

▪

Monks, I know no other single perfume so enticing,
so desirable,
so intoxicating,
so binding,
so distracting,
such a hindrance to winning
the unsurpassed peace from effort —
that is to say, monks,
as a woman's perfume.

Monks, whosoever clings to a woman's perfume — infatuated,
greedy,
fettered,
enslaved,
enthralled —
for many a long day shall grieve,
snared by the charms
of a woman's perfume.

▪

Monks, I know no other single taste so enticing,
so desirable,
so intoxicating,
so binding,
so distracting,
such a hindrance to winning
the unsurpassed peace from effort —
that is to say, monks,
as a woman's taste.

Monks, whosoever clings to a woman's taste — infatuated,
greedy,
fettered,
enslaved,
enthralled —
for many a long day shall grieve,
snared by the charms
of a woman's taste.

▪

Monks, I know no other single touch so enticing,
so desirable,
so intoxicating,
so binding,
so distracting,
such a hindrance to winning
the unsurpassed peace from effort —
that is to say, monks,
as a woman's touch.

Monks, whosoever clings to a woman's touch — infatuated,

greedy,
fettered,
enslaved,
enthralled —
for many a long day shall grieve,
snared by the charms
of a woman's touch.

§

Monks, a woman, even when going along,
will stop to ensnare the heart of a man;
whether standing,
sitting
or lying down,
laughing,
talking
or singing,
weeping,
stricken[6]
or dying,
a woman will stop to ensnare the heart of a man.

▪

Monks, if ever one would rightly say;

"It is wholly a snare of Mara", — verily, speaking rightly,

one may say of womanhood:

"It is wholly a snare of Māra."[7]

§

Go parley with a man with sword in hand;[8]
Use question with a goblin;[9] sit ye close[10]
Beside the envenomed snake, whose bite is death;
But never alone with a lone female talk!

Who mindfulness forgets, they fetter him
With gaze and smile, with sweet disordered dress,[11] [57] Coy blandishments — ne'er cool,[12] content, that man Aye stricken, dead. These five lust-linking strands Are seen in womanhood: her form, her sound,
Taste, perfume, touch — for each delights the mind;
And borne by flood of lusts, not seeing lust
In foll, men, faring on, by deeds of old[13]
Induce in destined time this or that life
In worlds,[14] But they who lust have understood Pursue their ways free of the thought; "Whence fear?"
Crossed over, yea, on earth with sainthood[15] won.'

---

[1] In the Pali we have mātā-puttā, but bhikkhu ca bhikkhunī ca; and I keep this order.

[2] Otāra, proneness; Cf. below V, § 226, where the passage recurs.

[3] It was a grave offence (pārājika) not to do so; see Vin. iii, 23-4.

[4] Cf. D. ii, 337.

[5] Ud. 75; UdA. 364.

[6] Ugghātitā. Comy. uddhumātā, 'puffy,' but this word is generally used of corpses.

[7] Māra here is the Evil One; Cf. S. i, 105; It. 56: 'the destroyer.'

[8] Comy. to cut off one's head with.

[9] Pisāca. Comy. a yakkha come to eat one.

[10] Asīde. Comy. ghaṭṭeyya.

[11] Dunnivatthena.

[12] The text reads svāsisaddo, with v.l. svāsaddo, savāsido; S.e. yavāsīdo; the Comy. is silent. I do not know the meaning. Nyanatiloka slips past, omitting the whole line!

[13] Purakkhatā. Comy. pure cārikā purato katā yeva; the word in this meaning is somewhat unusual.

[14] Bhavābhavaṃ.

[15] Āsavakkhayaṃ. Comy. arahattaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 56

The Preceptor

---

[69] [57]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now a certain monk approached his preceptor and said:

My body, sir, is as it were drugged;[1]
the quarters are not seen by me;
things[2] are not clear to me;
sloth and torpor compass my heart about and stay;
joyless,[3] I live the holy life;
and doubts about things are ever with me.'

▪

So that monk
with his fellow-monk
went to the Exalted Otte and,
on arrival,
saluted and sat down at one side.

So seated, the preceptor said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, this monk speaks thus:

"My body, sir, is as it were drugged;
the quartets are not seen by me;
things are not clear to me;
sloth and torpor compass my heart about and stay;
joyless, I live the godly life;
and doubts about things are ever with me.'

(And the Exalted One said:)

'Monk, it is ever thus!

When one dwells with doors of the senses unguarded,
with no moderation in eating,
not bent on [58] vigilance, not looking[4] for righteous things, nor day in day out[5]
practise the practice
of making become the things
that are wings to enlightenment;[6]
then is the body as though drugged, the quarters are not seen,
things are not clear,
sloth and torpor compass the heart and stay;
joyless, one lives the godly life;
and doubts about things are ever with one.

▪

Wherefore, monk, train yourself thus:

I will make the guard-doors of the senses become more,
I will be moderate in eating,
bent on vigilance,

look for righteous things
and dwell, day in day out,
practising the practice
of making become the things
that are wings to enlightenment.

Train yourself in this way, monk.'

§

Then that monk, admonished with this admonishment by the Exalted One, got up and saluted the Exalted One and departed,
keeping him on his right.

And not long afterwards,
dwelling alone,
secluded,
zealous,
earnest
and resolved,
that monk entered and abode
in that unsurpassed goal of the godly life, realizing it by personal knowledge
even, in this life;
for the sake of which clansmen rightly go forth from the home
into the homeless life;
and he fully realized:

Rebirth is destroyed,
lived is the godly life,
done is what had to be done,
and there is no more of this state.

And that monk was numbered among the arahants.[7]

§

Then that monk, with arahantship won,
went to his preceptor and said:

'Sir, no longer is my body as it were drugged;
the four quarters are visible;
things are clear;
sloth and torpor no longer compass my heart and stay;
with joy I live the godly life;
and I have no doubts about things.'

▪

So that monk
with his fellow-monk
went to the Exalted Otte and,
on arrival,
saluted and sat down at one side.[8]

So seated, the preceptor said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, this monk speaks thus:

'Sir, no longer is my body as it were drugged;
the four quarters are visible;
things are clear;
sloth and torpor no longer compass my heart and stay;
with joy I live the godly life;
and I have no doubts about things.'

▪

'Monk, it is ever thus!

When one dwells with doors of the senses guarded, with moderation in eating,
bent on vigilance,
looking for righteous things,
day in day out
practise the practice
of making become the things
that are wings to enlightenment;
then the body is not as though drugged,
the quarters are seen,
things are clear,
sloth and torpor do not compass the heart and stay;
joyful, one lives the godly life;
and doubts about things are never with one.

▪

Wherefore, monks, train yourself thus:

I will make the guard-doors of the senses become more,
I will be moderate in eating,
bent on vigilance,
look for righteous things
and dwell, day in day out,
practising the practice
of making become the things
that are wings to enlightenment.

Train yourseves in this way, monks.'

---

[1] This recurs at S. iii, 106; cf. also v, 153; D. ii, 99 and notes at S. trsls. (At K.S, iii, 90 read D. ii, for i.) [corrected - mo] Comy. Sanñjātagarubhāvo.

[2] Comy. Samathavipassanādhammā me na upaṭṭhanti; see DA. ii, 547. Possibly 'faculties' as Dial. ii, 107 is the meaning.

[3] Comy. glosses: ukkaṇthito, with neck stretched out: with longings; cf. Isaiah iii, 16.

[4] Avipassaka. Comy. avipassanta, agavesanta.

[5] Pubbarattāpararattaṃ: previous to night, beyond night.

[6] Comy. here these are reckoned as 37. (Originally with the Way, first, not last, as One, They will have amounted to the more auspicious number of 30.) See K.S. v, Introduction, p. 1.

[7] A stock sentence.

[8] The text repeats in full. [Ed.: Reconstructed for this edition. Hare does not note that the repetition is in the positive. The Pali repeats the admonition to train, which may have been directed at the preceptor or at other bhikkhus present.]

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 57

Ṭhāna Suttaṃ

Things To Be Contemplated

---

[71] [59]

Thus have I heard:

Once when the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī;
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things ought to be often contemplated
by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by him gone forth.

What five?

Old[1] age can come upon me;
I have not outstripped old age!

This ought to be often contemplated
by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by him gone forth.

▪

Disease can come upon me;
I have not outstripped disease!

This ought to be often contemplated
by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by him gone forth.

▪

Death can come upon me;
I have not outstripped death!

This ought to be often contemplated
by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by him gone forth.

▪

All things near and dear to me
are subject to variableness,[2]
subject to separation!

This ought to be often contemplated
by woman and man,

by house-dweller
and by him gone forth.

▪

I am the result of my own deeds;[3]
heir to deeds;
deeds are matrix;[4]
deeds are kin;
deeds are foundation;[5]
whatever deed I do,
whether good or bad,
I shall become heir to it!

This ought to be often contemplated
by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by him gone forth.

§

Monks, to what right end[6]
ought the thought:
Old age can come upon me;
I have not outstripped old age! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth?

Monks, beings in youth are obsessed with the pride of youth;
vaunting[7] in that pride,

they go about working evil
in deed,
word
and thought.

To one who often contemplates that thing,[8]
that pride of youth in youth
is either got rid of altogether
or reduced.

[60] Monks, to this end
ought the thought:
Old age can come upon me;
I have not outstripped old age! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth.

▪

Monks, to what right end ought the thought:
Disease can come upon me;
I have not outstripped disease! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth?

Monks, beings in health are obsessed with the pride of health;
vaunting in that pride
they go about working evil
in deed,
word
and thought.

To one who often contemplates that thing,
that pride of health
in health
is either got rid of altogether
or reduced.

Monks, it is to this end
ought the thought:
Disease can come upon me;
I have not outstripped disease! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth.

▪

Monks, to what right end ought the thought:
Death can come upon me;
I have not outstripped death! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth?

Monks, beings in the fullness of life are obsessed with the pride of life;
vaunting in that pride
they go about working evil
in deed,
word
and thought.

To one who often contemplates that thing,
that pride of life
in the fullness of life
is either got rid of altogether
or reduced.

Monks, it is to this, end
ought the thought:
Death can come upon me;
I have not outstripped death! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth.

▪

Monks, to what right end ought the thought:
All things near and dear to me
are subject to variableness,
subject to separation! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth?

Monks, beings are obsessed with a passionate desire for those who are dear;
excited by that passion
they go about working evil
in deed,
word
and thought.

To one who often contemplates that thing,
that passionate desire
is either got rid of altogether
or reduced.

Monks, it is to this end
ought the thought:
All things near and dear to me
are subject to variableness,

subject to separation! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth.

▪

Monks, to what right end ought the thought:
I am the result of my own deeds;
heir to deeds;
deeds are matrix;
deeds are kin;
deeds are foundation;
whatever deed I do,
whether good or bad,
I shall become heir to it! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth?

Monks, the ways of beings are evil
in deed,
evil in word
and evil in thought.

To one who often contemplates that thing,
those evil ways
are got rid of altogether
or reduced.

Monks, to this end ought the thought;
I am the result of my own deeds;
heir to deeds;
deeds are matrix;
deeds are kin;
deeds are foundation;

whatever deed I do,
whether good or bad,
I shall become heir to it! —
to be often contemplated by woman and man,
by house-dweller
and by one gone forth.

§

Monks,[9] the Ariyan disciple reflects thus:

I am not the only one who is subject to old age,
who has not outstripped old age; [61] but wheresoever there are beings,
coming and going,
faring on and arising,
all are subject to old age,
none has outstripped it.

And while he often contemplates this thing,
the Way comes into being;
and that Way he follows,
makes become
and develops;
and in doing so
the fetters[10] are got rid of,
the tendencies[11] are removed.

▪

So too, of the thought:

I am not the only one who is subject to disease,
who has not outstripped disease;
but wheresoever there are beings,
coming and going,
faring on and arising,
all are subject to disease,
none has outstripped it.

And while he often contemplates this thing,
the Way comes into being;
and that Way he follows,
makes become
and develops;
and in doing so
the fetters are got rid of,
the tendencies are removed.

▪

So too, of the thought:

I am not the only one who is subject to death,
who has not outstripped death;
but wheresoever there are beings,
coming and going,
faring on and arising,
all are subject to death,
none has outstripped it.

And while he often contemplates this thing,
the Way comes into being;
and that Way he follows,
makes become
and develops;
and in doing so

the fetters are got rid of,
the tendencies are removed.

▪

So too, of the thought:

I am not the only one
to whom all things near and dear
are subject to variableness,
subject to separation,
who has not outstripped variableness outstripped separation
in all things near and dear
but wheresoever there are beings,
coming and going,
faring on and arising,
all are subject to variableness,
subject to separation,
none has outstripped it.

And while he often contemplates this thing,
the Way comes into being;
and that Way he follows,
makes become
and develops;
and in doing so
the fetters are got rid of,
the tendencies are removed.

▪

So too, of the thought:

I am not the only one
who is the result of his own deeds;
heir to deeds;

who has not outstripped being the result of his own deeds
but wheresoever there are beings,
coming and going,
faring on and arising,
all are the result of their own deeds;
heir to their deeds;
none have outstripped
being the result of their own deeds..

And while he often contemplates this thing,
the Way comes into being;
and that Way he follows,
makes become
and develops;
and in doing so
the fetters are got rid of,
the tendencies are removed.

Having[12] these things: disease, old age and death —
As they, so men; repulsive is the thought to average man.
Not meet that I myself should be repelled
At creatures having these, seeing that I Do lead my life no otherwise than he.

While living thus, I having come to know
Religion[13] wherein no substrate is found,
I who was wont to vaunt in health, youth, life,
Overcame that pride and from the peace beheld Renunciation's[14] coolth. Nibbāna seen, Strength came to me. Ne'er now can I become Addict of sense desires. I will become A man who never turning back (hath taken)
The yonder-faring of the godly life.'[15]

---

[1] For the first three Cf. A. i, 145 (G.S. i, 129); for the third S. i, 97; for the fourth D. ii, 118, 144, also DA. ii, 564.

[2] Nānābhāvo vinābhāvo; Cf. James i, 17: 'Father of lights, with whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.'

[3] Kammassako. Comy. attano santakaṃ, This passage is stock; see below V, § 161; M. iii, 203; A. v, 88; Mil. 65; Vism. 301. Trsl. of M. and Vism. render in the sense of possession.

[4] Yoni. Comy. kāraṇaṃ..

[5] Paṭiaaraṇo. Comy. patiṭṭho.

[6] Cf. below V, § 144.

[7] For the same idea Cf. Shakespeare's Sonnet xv.

[8] Ṭhānaṃ, that is, the thought of old age, etc

[9] Sace of our text, in some MSS. and S.e. is omitted.

[10] Comy. the ten; see Dial. iii, 225; A. v, 17.

[11] Comy. the seven; see Dial. iii, 237; A. iv, 9; Cpd. 172. (Satta anusayā vigatattā paricchinnā parivaṭumā honti, see P.E.D. s.v. parivaṭuma.)

[12] This gāthā recurs at A. i, 147, with some different readings; AA. ii, 242 is fuller than Comy. hare.

[13] Dhammaṃ nirūpadhiṃ. Comy. arahatta-maggaṃ.

[14] Nekkhammaṃ daṭṭhu khemato (S.e. v.l. khemataṃ, see G.S. n.). Comy. Pabbajjaṃ khemato disvā. This pāda also recurs at Sn. 424 and 1098 SnA. 385: pabbajito'mhi; but at 598: nibbānaṇ ... kheman ti disvā.

[15] Comy. magga-brahma-cariya-parāyano.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 58

Licchavi Kumāra Suttaṃ

The Licchavi Young Men

---

[75] [62]

Thus have I heard:

At one time the Exalted One dwelt near Veaālī, at the Cabled Hall,
in Mahāvana.

And early one morning,
after dressing,
the Exalted One took bowl and robe and entered Veaālī for alms.

And having gone his round,
on his return,
after the midday meal,
he made his way into the great forest of Mahāvana, and sat down for the noonday rest
at the foot of a tree.

Now at that time a company, of Lacchavi young men were out stalking and ranging in Mahāvana;
they had their bows strung and were surrounded by a pack of dogs;
and they saw the Exalted One seated at the foot of the tree.

Then at that sight
they cast aside their bows, called off their dogs
and approached the Exalted One,
saluted him
and stood with hands upraised in silence reverencing him.

▪

Just then Mahānāma,[1] the Licchavi, was stretching his legs in Mahāvana
by walking up and down;
and he saw those young Licchavis with upraised hands
silently reverencing the Exalted One.

And Mahānāma, the Licchavi,
went to the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated, he said with bated breath:[2]

'They will become Vajjians,[3]
they will become Vajjians!'

'But why, Mahānāma, dost thou speak so:

"They will become Vajjians!"?'

'Lord, these Licchavi young men are quick-tempered,
rough,
greedy fellows.

Such presents as are sent[4] by clan folk — [63] sugar-cane,
jujube fruit,
sweet cakes,
sweetmeats
and lolly-pops[5] —
they go about plundering and eating;
they slap the women and the girls of the clan on the back.[6]

Such are these fellows who now with upraised hands stand in silence reverencing the Exalted One.'

▪

'Where soever these five conditions are found, Mahānāma,
whether in a crowned warrior-rajah,
or in a countryman living on his paternal[7] farm,
or in a general of an army,
or in a governor of villages,[8]
or in a guild-master,[9] or in those who make themselves
the one power among the clans,
growth may be expected
and not decline.

What five?

Take the case, Mahānāma, of a clansman who,[10]
with wealth gotten by work and zeal,

gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained in a lawful way,
honours,
reveres,
venerates
and reverences his parents.

At once his parents,
honoured,
revered,
venerated
and reverenced,
fondly regard him
with loving thoughts
and say:

"Long life to you,
and may your long life be protected!"

To the clansman, Mahānāma,
who has the fond regard of his parents,
growth may be expected
and not decline.

▪

Moreover, Mahānāma,
a clansman who,
with wealth gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained
in a lawful way,
honours,
reveres,

venerates
and reverences his children and wife.

At once his children and wife,
honoured,
revered,
venerated
and reverenced,
fondly regard him
with loving thoughts
and say:

"Long life to you,
and may your long life be protected!"

To the clansman, Mahānāma,
who has the fond regard of his children and wife,
growth may be expected
and not decline.

▪

Moreover, Mahānāma,
a clansman who,
with wealth gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained
in a lawful way,
honours,
reveres,
venerates
and reverences
his slaves, work folk and men.

At once his slaves, work folk and men,
honoured,

revered,
venerated
and reverenced,
fondly regard him
with loving thoughts
and say:

"Long life to you,
and may your long life be protected!"

To the clansman, Mahānāma, who has the fond regard of his slaves, work folk and men,
growth may be expected
and not decline.

▪

Moreover, Mahānāma,
a clansman who,
with wealth gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained
in a lawful way,
honours,
reveres,
venerates
and reverences
the labourers in his fields
and those whose business is with the boundaries.[11]

At once the labourers in his fields
and those whose business is with the boundaries,
honoured,
revered,
venerated

and reverenced,
fondly regard him
with loving thoughts
and say:

"Long life to you,
and may your long life be protected!"

To the clansman, Mahānāma,
who has the fond regard of the labourers in his fields
and those whose business is with the boundaries,
growth may be expected
and not decline.

▪

[64]Moreover, Mahānāma,
a clansman who,
with wealth gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained
in a lawful way,
honours,
reveres,
venerates
and reverences
the devas who are wont to receive oblations.

At once his the devas who are wont to receive oblations,
honoured,
revered,
venerated
and reverenced,
fondly regard him

with loving thoughts
and say:

"Long life to you,
and may your long life be protected!"

To the clansman, Mahānāma, who has the fond regard of the devas who are wont to receive oblations,
growth may be expected
and not decline.

▪

Moreover, Mahānāma,
a clansman who,
with wealth gotten by work and zeal,
gathered by the strength of the arm,
earned by the sweat of the brow,
justly obtained
in a lawful way,
honours,
reveres,
venerates
and reverences
recluses and godly men.

At once recluses and godly men,
honoured,
revered,
venerated
and reverenced,
fondly regard him
with loving thoughts
and say:

"Long life to you,
and may your long life be protected!"

To the clansman, Mahānāma,
who has the fond regard of recluses and godly men,
growth may be expected
and not decline.

Where soever these five conditions are found, Mahānāma,
whether in a crowned warrior-rajah,
a countryman living on his paternal farm,
a general of an army,
a governor of villages,
a guild-master,
or in those who make themselves
the one power among the clans, growth may be expected and not decline.

To mother, father dutiful, to child and wife
A blessing ever, for the weal of both:
Of those within the home and those who live[12]
By him, moral and wise in word is he.
For him, for those gone on before, for such As live e'en here,[13] for samaṇa and brāhman, Breeder of welfare doth the wise become,
(In that) by Dhamma in the home he lives.
Author of lovely[14] (conduct) worshipful[15]
Doth he become, and worthy praise. E'en here Men praise him, and to the hereafter gone,
In the bright world he dwells in happiness.'[16]

---

[1] We are not able to link up this Mahānāma with others of that name, either, e.g. with him of the first five disciples, or the Sakyan lay-kinsman. It is possible that we have a name substituted, when written suttas involved many blurred words, for the forgotten name of a disciple. Rhys Davids lists Licchavis and Videhas as forming two branches of one Vajjian confederacy, but this sutta points to Licchavis as not Vajjians, a more cultured oligarchy. Cf. Dial. ii, p. 79ff.; Buddh. India, ch. ii; C.H.I. i, 175.

[2] Udānaṃ udānesi.

[3] Or, as we might say, they will end by becoming Vajjians, their more cultured neighbours.

[4] Pahiṇakānini pahīyanti. I do not think the latter is from √HA, but from √HI and formed by false analogy. Thus as from pajahati the passive is pahīyati, pp. pahīna; so from pahiṇati (the Singhalese spell it with a dental, not lingual) the passive is pahiyati (so S.e., not with text pahīyati) with an adj.-noun, pahīṇa.

[5] Sakkhalakā.

[6] Pacchāliyaṃ khipanti. Comy. pacchato gantvā, piṭṭhipādena paharanti, they go behind and kick them with the upper part of the foot (see Vism. trsl. 288 on piṭṭhipādo). P.E.D. suggests 'lap' or 'basket' for pacchāliyaṃ, but the word may be resolved into pacchā and āli, a dike; so: side, see Childers. As regards khipanti, in English we have the counterpart in the word 'chuck.'

[7] Pettanika. Comy. pitaraṃ dattaṃ sāpateyyaṃ bhuñjati.

[8] Gāmagāmika. Comy. gāmānaṃ gāmika. A gāma is more like our old term 'hundred' than the modem idea of village.

[9] Pūgagāmaṇika. Comy. gaṇajeitthaka.

[10] Cf. above, § 41.

[11] Sāmanta-saṃvohāre, Comy. rajju-daṇḍehi bhūmippamāṇe gāhake saṃvohāre, those who hold the office of measuring the ground with rope and rod — i.e., surveyors.

[12] The text and S.e. read anujīvino, but Comy. upajīvino.

[13] Diṭṭhe dhamme ca jīvitaṃ. Comy. ye ca ... jīvanti, [14] So karitvāna kalyāṇaṃ.

[15] We should read with Comy. and S.e. pujjo, I think.

[16] The last line of the text recurs above, § 41, and at A. ii, 5; It. 111.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 59

Paṭhama Vuḍḍha-Pabbajita Suttaṃ

Hard to Find (a)[1]

---

[78] [64]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, it is hard to find one,
gone forth when old,[2]
endowed with five qualities.

What five?

[65] Monks, it is hard to find one who is subtle-minded
gone forth when old,
hard to find one who is proper in deportment,
hard to find one who is very learned,

hard to find one who is a preacher of Dhamma, hard to find one who has the Discipline by heart.

Monks, it is hard to find one,
gone forth when old,
endowed with these five qualities.'

---

[1] Dullabho, lit. hard to obtain.

[2] Cf. Harita's trouble at Brethr. 34.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VI: Nīvaraṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VI: The Hindrances

Sutta 60

Dutiya Vuḍḍha-Pabbajita Suttaṃ

Hard to Find (b)

---

[78] [65]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, it is hard to find one,
gone forth when old,
endowed with five qualities.

What five?

Monks, it is hard to find one who speaks well, it is hard to find one who grasps what is easily grasped,
it is hard to find one having the talent to grasp,[1]
it is hard to find one who is a preacher of Dhamma, it is hard to find one who has the discipline by heart.

Monks, it is hard to find one,
gone forth when old,
endowed with these five qualities.'

---

[1] Padakkhiṇaggāhī lit. grasping on the right. Comy. dinn'ovādaṃ padakkhiṇato gaṇhanto. The word recurs at A. v, 24, where the Comy. observes: yathā ekacco ovadiyamāno vāmato gaṅhāti paṭippharati vā asuṇanto vā gacchati evaṃ akatvā ovadatha bhante anusāsatha tumhesu anovadantesu ho añño ovadissati ti padakkhiṇaṃ ganhāti. See K.S. ii, 137; below V, § 156.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 61

Paṭhama Saññā Suttaṃ

Thoughts (a)[1]

---

[79] [65]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[2] these five thoughts,
when made become,
made an increase in,
are very fruitful,
of great advantage,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as their goal.

What five?

The thought of foulness;
the thought of death;
the thought of peril;
the thought of the cloying of food;
the sense of distaste as to the world.

Verily, monks, these five thoughts,
when made become,
made an increase in,
are very fruitful,
of great advantage,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as their goal.'

---

[1] Saññā, as vague a term as is popularly our 'thought.'

[2] Cf. D. iii, 289; S. v, 132; A. i, 41, etc.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 62

Dutiya Saññā Suttaṃ

Thoughts (b)

---

[79] [66]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five thoughts,
when made become,
made an increase in,
are very fruitful,
of great advantage,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as their goal.

What five?

Of impermanence;
of not-self;
of death;
of the cloying of food;
of distaste as to the world.

Verily, monks, these five thoughts,
when made become,
made an increase in,
are very fruitful,
of great advantage,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as their goal.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 63

Paṭhama Vaḍḍhī Suttaṃ

Growth[1]

---

[80] [66]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[2] growing in five ways of growth,
the Ariyan disciple grows in Ariyan growth;
he heeds what is essential and best
for his whole being.[3]

In what five?

He grows in faith,
virtue,

learning,
giving up
and insight.

Verily, monks, growing in these five ways of growth,
the Ariyan disciple grows in Ariyan growth;
he heeds what is essential and best
for his whole being.

Whoso[4] in faith, in virtue makes a forward[5] growth,
In learning, insight, giving up, alike:
A very man like this, keen-eyed, lays hold E'en here upon the real in himself.'

---

[1] Vaḍḍhi.

[2] Cf. S. iv, 250 (K.S. iv, Introd. xiv); and above, § 40.

[3] Kāyausa.

[4] Almost the same gāthā, recurs at A. v, 137. Cf. the identical sutta § iv in S. iv, 250, with a varied translation in K.S. iv, 168 f.

[5] Here pavaḍḍhati.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 64

Dutiya Vaḍḍhī Suttaṃ

Growth (b)

---

[80] [66]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, growing in five ways of growth,
the devout Ariyan woman grows in Ariyan growth;
she heeds what is essential and best
for her whole being.

In what five?

She grows in faith,
virtue,
learning,

giving up
and insight.

Verily, monks, growing in these five ways of growth,
the Ariyan woman grows in Ariyan growth;
she heeds what is essential and best
for her whole being.

Whoso in faith, in virtue makes a forward growth,
In learning, insight, giving up, alike:
That woman, good, devout, heeds here the best for self.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 65

Alaṃ-Sākaccha Suttaṃ

Talk

---

[66]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, endowed with five qualities,
a monk may[1] well talk
to his fellows in the godly life.

What five?

Monks, herein a monk
in himself has achieved virtue
and [67] explains a question raised[2]
by a talk on the achieving of virtue;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved concentration
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of concentration;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved insight
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved emancipation
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved the knowledge and insight of emancipation
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of knowledge and insight of emancipation.

Verily, monks, endowed with these five qualities,
a monk may well talk
to his fellows in the godly life.'

---

[1] Alaṃ, Comy. yutto, fitting.

[2] Āgataṃ. Comy. pucchitaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 66

Alaṃ-Sājīva Suttaṃ

An Example[1]

---

[67]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a monk endowed with five qualities,
is a fitting example
to his fellows in the godly life.

What five?[ed1]

Monks, herein a monk
in himself has achieved virtue

and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of virtue;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved concentration
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of concentration;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved insight
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved emancipation
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

So too, a monk in himself has achieved the knowledge and insight of emancipation
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of knowledge and insight of emancipation.

Verily, monks, endowed with these five qualities,
is a fitting example
to his fellows in the godly life.'

---

[1] Sajīvan. This word is explained at Vin. iii, 24 as sikkhāpadaṃ, a precept or rule of training. Cf. St. Paul to Timothy (I, iv, 12): 'Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.' these suttas are preached by Sāriputta (below V, §§ 163 - 164).

[2] Comy. glosses: abhisaṅkhataṃ, prepared.

[ed1] Hare abridges the rest of this sutta with: "The reply is as in § 65, but kataṃ[2] is used for āgataṃ."

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 67

Paṭhama Iddhi-Pāda Suttaṃ

Psychic Power (a)

---

[67]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] whatsoever monk or nun
make five things become,
make an increase in five things,
unto such
one of two fruits may be expected:
either gnosis here now or,
being with some substrate left,
the state of a Non-returner.

What five?

▪

Monks,[2] herein a monk makes become the psychic power
which embraces desire-to-do,
combined with concentration and resolution;

makes become the psychic power
which embraces energy,
combined with concentration and resolution;

makes become the psychic power
which embraces thought,
combined with concentration and resolution;

makes become the psychic power
which embraces investigation,
combined with concentration and resolution;

and fifthly,
just exertion.[3]

▪

Monks, whatsoever monk or nun makes these five things become,
makes an increase in these five things,
unto such
one of two fruits may be expected:
either gnosis here now or,
being with some substrate left,
the state of a Non-returner.'

---

[1] This is a stock opening; Cf. below V, § 122; D. ii, 314; M. i, 63; S. v, 129; A. v, 108; It. 39; Sn. p. 140. On aññā, gnosis, see Brethr., p. xxxiii.

[2] For references see D. iii, 221; K.S. v, 225 ff. S.e. has 'pe' between the terms.

[3] Ussoḷhi. Comy. adhimatta-viriya, extraordinary energy.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 68

Dutiya Iddhi-Pāda Suttaṃ

Psychic Power (b)

---

[68]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, before I became enlightened, while I was still a bodhisat without complete enlightenment,
I made five qualities become,
I made an increase in five qualities.

What five?

Monks, herein I made become the psychic power which embraces desire-to-do,

combined with concentration and resolution;

I made become the psychic power
which embraces energy,
combined with concentration and resolution;

I made become the psychic power
which embraces thought,
combined with concentration and resolution;

I made become the psychic power
which embraces investigation,
combined with concentration and resolution;

and fifthly I made become,
just exertion.[1]

§

Monks, when I had made these qualities become,
made an increase in them,
I bent the mind
to realize by psychic knowledge whatever is realizable by psychic knowledge, and I became an eyewitness
in every case
whatever the range might be.

▪

Did I wish:[2]

"I would experience psychic power
in manifold modes -

Being one,
I would become many;
being many,
I would become one;
I would become visible or invisible;
I would go without let
through walls,
through fences,
through mountains,
as if they were but air;
I would dive in and out of the earth,
as if it were but water;
I would walk on water
without parting it,
as if it were earth;
I would travel cross-legged through the air,
as a bird on the wing;
I would handle and stroke the moon and the sun,
though they be so powerful and strong;
I would scale the heights of the world
even in this body" -

I became an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may have been.

▪

Did I wish:

"With the celestial means of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would hear sounds

both of devas and mankind,
both far and near" -

I became an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may have been.

▪

Did I wish:

"I would compass
and know with my mind
the thoughts of other beings,
other persons;
I would know the passionate mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the malignant mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the infatuated mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the congested mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the diffuse mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
I would know the lofty mind as such,
the low mind as such;
a would know the better mind as such,
the inferior mind as such;
I would know the controlled mind as such,
the uncontrolled as such;
I would know the liberated mind as such,
the mind not freed as such" -

I became an eyewitness
in every case,

whatever the range may have been.

▪

Did I wish:

"I would call to mind
many a previous dwelling,
that is to say,
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each,
such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
that faring on thence
I arose there,
when such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
faring on thence

I arose here;
thus I would call to mind
each detail and circumstance
of my many previous dwellings" -

I became an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may have been.

▪

Did I wish:

"With the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would see beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
I would see them pass
according to their works;
thus these worthies
were given over to evil ways
in deed,
word
and thought,
defamers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
reaping the reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in hell,
the wayward way,

the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
or,
those acted rightly
in deed,
word
and thought,
they were no defamers of the Ariyans,
but held right views
and reaped their reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in heaven,
that happy place of bliss;
thus, with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
I would see beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
I would see them pass
according to their works" -

I became an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may have been.

▪

Did I wish:

"Having destroyed the cankers,
I would enter
and abide in
the emancipation of the mind,
in the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
having realized that state
by my own knowledge
even in this very life -

I became an eyewitness
in every case,
whatever the range may have been.

---

[1] The text repeats. [Ed.: Completed here.]

[2] The text abbreviates; Cf. above, § 23. [Ed.: Completed here.]

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 69

Nibbidā Suttaṃ

Disgust

---

[68]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an increase in,
lead to complete disgust,
dispassion,
ending,
calm,
knowledge,

enlightenment
and to Nibbāna.[1]

What five?

Monks, herein a monk abides
perceiving the foulness of the body;
is conscious of the cloying of food;
is conscious of distaste as to the world;
perceives impermanence in all compounded things;
and the thought of death is by him inwardly well established.[2]

Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an increase in,
lead to complete disgust,
dispassion,
ending,
calm,
knowledge,
enlightenment
and to Nibbāna.'

---

[1] This is stock; Cf. D. i, 189; A. iv, 143; Ud. 36; S. ii, 223; M.ii.82.

[2] Cf. below V, § 121.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
VII: Saññā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VII: Thoughts

Sutta 70

Āsavakkhaya Suttaṃ

Destruction of the Cankers

---

[68]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an or crease in,
lead to the destruction of the cankers.

What five?

Monks, herein a monk abides
perceiving the foulness of the body;
is conscious of the cloying of food;

is conscious of distaste as to the world;
perceives impermanence in all compounded things;
and the thought of death is by him inwardly well established.

Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an ir crease in,
lead to the destruction of the cankers.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 71

Paṭhama Ceto-Vimutti-Phala Suttaṃ

The Fruits of Mind-Emancipation (a)

---

[69]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an increase in,
have as their fruits
mind-emancipation
and the advantages thereof,
insight-emancipation
and the advantages thereof.

What five?

Monks, herein a monk abides
perceiving the foulness of the body;
is conscious of the cloying of food;
is conscious of distaste as to the world;
perceives impermanence in all compounded things;
and the thought of death is by him inwardly well established.

Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an increase in,
have as their fruits
mind-emancipation
and the advantages thereof,
insight-emancipation
and the advantages thereof.

§

Monks, when[1] indeed a monk is both mind-emancipated
and insight-emancipated,
that monk is said to have lifted the barrier,[2] filled in the moat,
pulled up the pillar,[3]
withdrawn the bolts,
an Ariyan,
with flag laid low,
with burden dropped,[4]
free of the fetters.[5]

■

And how, monks,
has the monk lifted the barrier?

Herein by the monk
ignorance is got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk lifted the barrier.

▪

And how, monks, has the monk
filled in the moat?

Herein [70] by the monk
coming-to-be again,
birth
and faring on
are got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk
filled in the moat.

▪

And how, monks, has the monk
pulled up the pillar?

Herein by the monk
craving is got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk
pulled up the pillar.

▪

And how, monks, has the monk
withdrawn the bolts?

Herein by the monk
the five lower fetters are got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk
withdrawn the bolts.

▪

And how, monks, is the monk
an Ariyan,
with flag laid low,
with burden dropped,
free of the fetters?

Herein, monks, by the monk
the conceit "I am" is got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,

made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, is the monk an Ariyan,
with flag laid low,
with burden dropped,
free of the fetters.'

---

[1] This passage recurs at M. i, 139.

[2] Cf. Dhp. 398.

[3] Abbuḷhesiko. Comy. esikātthambhaṃ luñcitvā. P.E.D., desire, but the Comy. regards all terms as analogues, so the literal trsl. is given.

[4] Cf. Th. i, 1021.

[5] The Comy. explains with much exegetical matter by a simile: Imagine two cities, one a city of robbers, the other a city of peace; and suppose some mighty soldier were to think: 'So long as the robbers' city exists, the city of peace is not free from fear.' So he dons his armour and attacks and burns that city and returns to rejoice at home. The skandha group is the robbers' city, Nibbāna is the city of peace, an earnest striver is the mighty soldier.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 72

Paṭhama Ceto-Vimutti-Phala Suttaṃ

The Fruits of Mind-Emancipation (b)

---

[70]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an increase in,
have as their fruits
mind-emancipation
and the advantages thereof,
insight-emancipation
and the advantages thereof.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of ill in impermanence,
the thought of no-self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
and the thought of dispassion.

Monks, these five things,
when made become,
made an increase in,
have as their fruits
mind-emancipation
and the advantages thereof,
insight-emancipation
and the advantages thereof.

§

Monks, when indeed a monk is both
mind-emancipated
and insight-emancipated,
that monk is said to have lifted the barrier,
filled in the moat,
pulled up the pillar,
withdrawn the bolts,
an Ariyan,
with flag laid low,
with burden dropped,
free of the fetters.

▪

And how, monks,
has the monk lifted the barrier?

Herein by the monk
ignorance is got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk lifted the barrier.

▪

And how, monks, has the monk
filled in the moat?

Herein by the monk
coming-to-be again,
birth
and faring on
are got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk
filled in the moat.

▪

And how, monks, has the monk
pulled up the pillar?

Herein by the monk
craving is got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,

made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk
pulled up the pillar.

▪

And how, monks, has the monk
withdrawn the bolts?

Herein by the monk
the five lower fetters are got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, has the monk
withdrawn the bolts.

▪

And how, monks, is the monk
an Ariyan,
with flag laid low,
with burden dropped,
free of the fetters?

Herein, monks, by the monk
the conceit "I am" is got rid of,
cut down to the roots,
made as a palm-tree stump,
made so that it cannot grow up in the future,
conditioned so that it cannot rise again.

Thus, monks, is the monk an Ariyan,
with flag laid low,
with burden dropped,
free of the fetters.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 73

Paṭhama Dhamma-Viharin Suttaṃ

Living by Dhamma (a)

---

[70]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī

Now a certain monk visited the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted [71] One:

'Lord, they say:

"Living by Dhamma,[1] living by Dbamma!"

Lord, how does a monk live by Dhamma?'

▪

'Monk, consider[2] the monk who masters Dhamma:

the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms,
songs,
solemnities,
speeches,
birth-stories,
marvels
and runes[3] -

he spends the day in that mastery;
he neglects to go apart[4] (for meditation)
and devotes not himself to calm of purpose of the self.

Monk, that monk is said to be swift[5] to master,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

Again, consider the monk who teaches others Dhamma in detail,
as he has heard it,
as he has mastered it -
he spends the day in convincing[6] others of Dhamma;
he neglects to go apart
and devotes not himself to calm of purpose of the self.

Monk, that monk is said to be swift to convince,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

Again, consider the monk who gives in full a repetition of Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learned it -
he spends the day in repeating it;

he neglects to go apart
and devotes not himself to calm of purpose of the self.

Monk, that monk is said to be swift to repeat,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

Then consider the monk who turns his mind to Dhamma,
ponders over it,
reflects on it,
as he has heard it,
as he has learned it -
he spends his day in thinking about Dhamma;
he neglects to go apart
and devotes not himself to calm of purpose of the self.

Monk, that monk is said to be swift to think,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

But, monk, take the case of the monk who masters Dhamma:

the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms,
songs,
solemnities,
speeches,
birth-stories,
marvels
and runes -

and spends not the day in that mastery, neglects not to go apart and devotes himself [72] to calm of purpose of the self.

Verily, monk, such a monk is one who lives by Dhamma.

§

Monk, thus, verily, have I declared one swift to master,
one swift to convince,
one swift to repeat,
one swift to think
and one who lives by Dhamma.

▪

Monk,[7] what should be done by a teacher for his disciples, seeking their good,
from compassion and out of pity,
that has been done by me for you![8]

(Behold) these tree-roots,
these empty places, monk!

Meditate, monk,
and be not slothful;
reproach not yourself afterwards![9]

This is our command to you.'

---

[1] Dhamma-vihārī. I have not been able to find this compound elsewhere. 'By Dhamma' comes nearest to the parallel term dhammena, frequently met with. The other form is dhammaṃ: dhammaṃ cara, met with both in Upanishad and in Sutta.

[2] Idha.

[3] This list recurs at M. i, 133; A. ii, 7; Vin. iii, 8. See Expos. 33: DA, i, 23 ff. for explanation and examples; below V, § 155.

[4] Comy. ekībhāvaṃ vissajjeti.

[5] Bahulo, much, full of.

[6] The text reads -paññattiyā, but S.e., and Comy. -sañnattiyā, the latter observing: dhammassa saññāpanāya (v.l. paññāpanāya).

[7] This is a stock paragraph; see M. i, 46; S. v, 157.

[8] Both Comy. and S.e. read vo.

[9] Comy. seems to consider this was addressed to a young monk and the B. exhorted him to strive in youth and not wait till old age came; cf. Ecclesiastes xii, 1 for the same sentiment.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 74

Dutiya Dhamma-Viharin Suttaṃ

Living by Dhamma (b)

---

[72]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī

Now a certain monk visited the Exalted One, saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, they say:

"Living by Dhamma, living by Dbamma!"

Lord, how does a monk live by Dhamma?'

▪

'Monk, consider the monk who masters Dhamma:

the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms,
songs,
solemnities,
speeches,
birth-stories,
marvels
and runes -

but knows not through insight the goal beyond.[1]

Monk, that monk is said to be swift to master,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

Again, consider the monk who teaches others Dhamma in detail,
as he has heard it,
as he has mastered it -
he spends the day in convincing others of Dhamma;
but knows not through insight the goal beyond.

Monk, that monk is said to be swift to convince,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

Again, consider the monk who gives in full a repetition of Dhamma,
as he has heard it,
as he has learned it -
he spends the day in repeating it;
but knows not through insight the goal beyond..

Monk, that monk is said to be swift to repeat,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

Then consider the monk who turns his mind to Dhamma,
ponders over it,
reflects on it,
as he has heard it,
as he has learned it -
he spends his day in thinking about Dhamma;
but knows not through insight the goal beyond.

Monk, that monk is said to be swift to think,
but he lives not by Dhamma.

▪

But, monk, take the case of the monk who masters Dhamma:

the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms,
songs,
solemnities,
speeches,
birth-stories,
marvels
and runes -

and spends not the day in that mastery,
but knows through insight the goal beyond.

Verily, monk, such a monk is one who lives by Dhamma.

§

Monk, thus, verily, have I declared one swift to master,
one swift to convince,
one swift to repeat,
one swift to think
and one who lives by Dhamma.

§

Monk, what should be done by a teacher for his disciples,
seeking their good,
from compassion and out of pity,
that has been done by me for you!

(Behold) these tree-roots,
these empty places, monk!

Meditate, monk,
and be not slothful;
reproach not yourself afterwards!

This is our command to you.'

---

[1] Uttariñ c'assa paññāya atthaṃ na ppajānāti. Comy. uttariṃ tassa dhammassa ... cattari saccāni na passati.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 75

Paṭhama Yodhājīvūpama Suttaṃ

The Warrior (a)

---

[72]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five kinds of warriors
are found in the world.

What five?

Monks, in one case there is the warrior who,
just at the sight of the cloud of dust,[1]
loses heart

and falters
and stiffens not,[2]
nor is able to go down to battle.[3]

Monks, there is here
this [73] sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the first kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Again, though another endure (the sight of) the dust cloud, just on seeing a standard lifted up,[4]
he loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to go down to battle.

Monks, there is here
this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the second kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Again, though another endure the dust-cloud
and the standard,
at the sound of tumult[5]
he loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to go down to battle.

Monks, there is here
this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the third kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Though another endure the dust-cloud,
the standard
and the tumult,
when struck[6] in conflict
he fails.

Monks, there is here
this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the fourth kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Then there is one who endures the dust-cloud,
the standard,
the tumult
and the conflict;
victorious in battle,
winning the fight,
he continues at the head[7] of the battle.

Monks, there is here
this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the fifth kind of warrior
found in the world.

Monks, these are the five kinds of warrior
found in the world.

Even so, monks, these five kinds of persons,
like warriors,
are found among monks.

What five?

Monks, in the case of the monk who on seeing the dust-cloud
loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to stay the course[8]
of the godly life —
he declares his weakness,[9]
gives up the training
and returns to the lower life.

And what for him is the dust-cloud?

Monks, that monk hears:

"Tis said,[10]
in such and such a village or town
there are women and girls, passing fair to look upon,
lovely,
with a wondrous lotus-like [74] beauty!"[11]

And when he hears this,
he loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is he able to stay the course

of the godly life,
but declares his weakness,
gives up the training
and returns to the lower life.

This for him
is the dust-cloud.[12]

Monks, just as the warrior on seeing the dust-cloud
loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to go down to battle;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here
this sort of person.

This, monks, is the first kind of person,
like a warrior,
found among monks.

§

Again, monks, a monk endures the dust-cloud, but at the sight of the standard
loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to stay the course
of the godly life —

he declares his weakness,
gives up the training
and returns to the low(er) life.

And what for him is the standard?

In this case the monk does not merely hear that in such and such a village or town there are some lovely women and girls,
passing fair to look upon,
with wondrous lotus-like beauty — but when he sees it for himself;
he loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is he able to stay the course
of the godly life,
but declares his weakness,
gives up the training
and returns to the low(er) life.

This for him is the standard.

Monks, just as the warrior endures the dust-cloud,
but at the sight of the standard
loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to go down to battle;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here
this sort of person.

This, monks, is the second kind of person,
like a warrior,

found among monks.

§

Again, monks, a monk endures both the dust-cloud
and the standard,
but at the sound of the tumult[13]
loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to stay the course
of the godly life —
he declares his weakness,
gives up the training
and returns to the low(er) life.

And what for him is the tumult?

In this case, monks, some woman comes along,
when he has gone to forest,
tree root
or lonely[14] place,
and laughs him to scorn,
rails[15] on him,
snaps her fingers at him[16]
and mocks[17] him;
and being so treated by a woman he
loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to stay the course

of the godly life —
he declares his weakness,
gives up the training
and returns to the low(er) life.

This for him is the tumult.

[75] Monks, just as the soldier endures both the dust-cloud
and the standard,
but at the sound of the tumult
loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not,
nor is able to go down to battle;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here this sort of person.

This, monks, is the third kind of person,
like a warrior,
found among monks.

§

Again, monks, a monk a monk endures the dust-cloud
and the standard,
and the tumult,
but being struck;[18] in conflict,
fails.

And what for him is the conflict?

In this case, monks,
some woman comes along,
when he has gone to forest,
tree-root
or some lonely place,
and sits down close beside him,
lies down close beside him
and cuddles up to him;[19]
and being treated thus by a woman,
without giving up the training,
without declaring his weakness,
he gives himself over to fornication.

This to him is the conflict.

Monks, just as the warrior
endures the dust-cloud,
and the standard
and the tumult, but,
when struck in conflict,
fails;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here this sort of person.

This, monks, is the fourth kind of person,
like a warrior,
found among monks.

§

Again, monks, there is the monk who endures the dust-cloud,
the standard,
the tumult
and the conflict;
victorious in battle,
winning the fight,
he continues at the head of the battle.

And what to him is victory in battle?

Herein also, monks,
some woman comes along,
when the monk has gone to forest,
tree-root
or some lonely place,
and sits down close beside him,
lies down close beside him
and cuddles up to him;
but being treated thus by a woman,
he disentangles
and frees himself
and goes off whither soever he will.

▪

And[20] he resorts to some secluded spot:
forest,
tree-root,
mountain,
glen,
rock-cave,
cemetery,
wooded upland,
open space
or heap of straw;

and come to forest,
tree-root
or empty hut,
he sits cross-legged,
with body erect,
setting mindfulness in front of him.

▪

Putting away all hankering,
he abides with heart free therefrom;
he cleanses his mind of hankering; [76]

patting away ill-will and hatred,
he abides with heart free therefrom;
kindly and compassionate to all creatures,
he cleanses his mind of ill-will and hatred:

putting away sloth and torpor,
he abides free therefrom;
conscious of light,
mindful and self-possessed,
he cleanses his mind of sloth and torpor:

putting away flurry and worry,
he abides poised;
with heart serene within,
he cleanses his mind of flurry and worry:

putting away doubt,
be abides with doubt passed by;
no more he questions "Why?"
of right things;
he cleanses his mind of doubt.

▪

Putting away these five hindrances,
when the mind's corruptions are weakened by insight,
aloof from sensuous appetites
enters and abides in the first musing,[21]
wherein applied and sustained thought works,
which is born of solitude
and is full of joy and ease;

suppressing applied and sustained thought,
he enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of zest and ease,
free from applied and sustained thought,
and there the mind becomes calm and one-pointed;

free from the fervour of zest,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease;

putting away ease
and by putting away ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill.

■

With[22] the heart thus serene,
purified,

cleansed,
spotless,
devoid of defilement,
supple,
ready to act,
firm and imperturbable,
he bends the mind to know
the destruction of the cankers.

As it really is, he understands:

This is Ill —

as it really is, he understands:

This is the origin of Ill —

as it really is, he understands:

This is the ending of Ill —

as it really is, he understands:

This is the way leading to the ending of Ill.

As it really is, he understands the thought;

These are the cankers —

This the origin of the cankers —

This the ending of the cankers —

This the way leading to the ending of the cankers.

▪

Knowing this,
seeing this,
his heart is free from the canker of lust,
free from the canker of becomings,[23]
free from the canker of ignorance,
and in the freedom
comes the knowledge of that freedom,
and he knows:

Birth is destroyed;
lived is the godly life;
done is what had to be done;
there is no more of this state.

This to him is victory in battle.

§

Monks, just as the warrior endures the dust-cloud,
the standard,
the tumult
and the conflict;
and, victorious in battle,
winning the fight,
continues even at the head of the battle;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is [77] here
this sort of person.

This, monks, is the fifth kind of person,
like a warrior,

found among monks.

These, monks,are the five kinds of persons,
like a warriors,
found among monks.

---

[1] Rajaggaṃ. Comy. as J, v, 187: rajakkhandhaṃ: of elephants, horses, etc.

[2] Na santhambhati. Cf. Hamlet I, v: 'And you, my sinews ... bear me stiffly up.'

[3] Cf. Pug. 65, below V, § 139 for this phraseology.

[4] Comy. set up on the backs of elephants, horses, etc., in chariots.

[5] Ussādanaṃ; so S.e. and Comy. explaining: the noise of elephants, etc.

[6] Haññati; both S.e. and Comy. read āhaññati.

[7] Saṃgāmasīsa. Comy. taṃ yeva jaya-kkhandhāvāra-ṭṭhānaṃ.

[8] Santānetuṃ, v.l. sandhāretuṃ, S.e. and Comy. as text; this form is not in P.E.D. Comy. explains: brahmacariya-vāsaṃ anupacchijjamānaṃ gopetuṃ na sakkoti, he cannot provide against uninterruptedly living the godly life.

[9] See above, § 55.

[10] Nāma.

[11] This is stock; Cf. D. i, 114; S. i, 95; A. ii, 203; Vin. i, 268.; DA. i, 282 is much the same as Mp. 632.

[12] Rajo (dust) is etymologically associated with rajati, sensuous excitement or pleasure. Cf. below, sutta 81: rajanīya (enticing).

[13] Ussādanaṃ.

[14] Suññā, empty.

[15] Ullapati. Comy. merely katheti; in Sk. ullāpa means abuse.

[16] ujjhaggeti; both S.e. and Comy. so, the latter observing: ppāṅiṃ paharitvā mahā-hasitaṃ hasitaṃ; lit. to laugh out at.

[17] Uppaṇḍeti. Comy. uppaṇḍena kaihaṃ katheti(!)

[18] S.e. reads ā-, as above.

[19] Comy. having won him over, she sits down on the same seat or - very near him.

[20] This passage recurs at D. i, 71; M. i, 260; A. i, 241; Vin. ii, 146, etc.

[21] Jhāna.

[22] This is stock; see D. i, 83; M. i, 23; A. iv, 178.

[23] Bhavāsava, here bhavānaṃ āsavo, 'bhava' having the meaning of 'lives' or 'world.' See Manual of Buddhism, 1932, p. 127; G.S. i, 203.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 76

Dutiya Yodhājīvūpama Suttaṃ

The Warrior (b)

---

[77]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five kinds of warriors
are found in the world.

What five?

Monks, in one case a warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,[1]

goes down into the thick of the fight;
and there he dares and strives;
but others strike him
as he dares and strives and overpower him.[2]

Monks, there is here this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the first kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Again, another warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
and as he dares and strives
the enemy wound[3] him.

And they bear[4] him away
to bring him to his relations;
but while he is being carried by his kinsmen,
ere he arrives,
he dies on the way to his relations.

Monks, there is here this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the second kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Another warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
and as he dares and strives
the enemy wound him
and wounded by the enemy,
he is carried to his relations
and they nurse him and care for him,
but he dies of that hurt.

Monks, there is here this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the third kind kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Another warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
and as he dares and strives
the enemy wound him
and wounded by the enemy,
he is carried to his relations
and they nurse him and care for him,
is cured of that hurt.

Monks, there is here this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the fourth kind of warrior
found in the world.

▪

Then, monks, there is the soldier who,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
victorious in battle,
winning the fight,
he continues at the head of the battle.

Monks, there is here this sort of warrior.

This, monks, is the fifth kind of warrior
found in the world.

Monks, these are the five kinds of warriors
found in the world.

§

[78] Even so, monks, these five kinds of persons,
like warriors,
are found in the world.

What five?

Monks,[5] take the case of a monk
who lives dependent on some village or town —
while it is yet early,
he robes himself and with bowl and cloak
enters that village or town for alms,
just with his body under no restraint,
with speech unrestrained,
with mind unrestrained,
without mindfulness being set up,
with his faculties uncontrolled;
and there he sees a woman
with dress disordered
or not properly dressed,
and at the sight
passion overwhelms his mind;
in that state,
without giving up the training,
without declaring his weakness,
he gives himself over to fornication.

Monks, just as the warrior,
grasping sword and shield,
binding on bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight
and there dares and strives;
but the enemy strike and overpower him:
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here this sort of person.

This, monks, is the first kind of person,
like a warrior,
found among monks.

▪

Again, monks, take the case of a monk
who lives dependent on some village or town —
while it is yet early,
he robes himself and with bowl and cloak
enters that village or town for alms,
just with his body under no restraint,
with speech unrestrained,
with mind unrestrained,
without mindfulness being set up,
with his faculties uncontrolled;
and there he sees a woman
with dress disordered
or not properly dressed,
and at the sight
passion overwhelms his mind;
in that state,
he burns in body,
he burns in mind;
and the thought comes to him:

What if I go to the Park
and say to the monks:

"Good sirs, I burn[6] with passion;
I am overcome by passion;
I cannot stay the course of the godly life;
I declare my weakness
and give up the training;
I will return to the lower life."

As he goes to the Park,
ere he arrives,

even on the way to the Park,
he declares his weakness,
gives up the training
and returns to the lower life.

Monks, just as the warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
and as he dares and strives
the enemy wound him.

And they bear him away
to bring him to his relations;
but while he is being carried by his kinsmen,
ere he arrives,
he dies on the way to his relations;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here this sort of person.

This, monks, is the second kind of person,
like a warrior,
found among monks.

▪

Again, monks, take the case of a monk
who lives dependent on some village or town —
while it is yet early,
he robes himself and with bowl and cloak
enters that village or town for alms,

just with his body under no restraint,
with speech unrestrained,
with mind unrestrained,
without mindfulness being set up,
with his faculties uncontrolled;
and there he sees a woman
with dress disordered
or not properly dressed,
and at the sight
passion overwhelms his mind;
in that state,
he burns in body,
he burns in mind;
and the thought comes to him:

What if I go to the Park
and say to the [79] monks:

"Good sirs, I burn with passion;
I am overcome by passion;
I cannot stay the course of the godly life;
I declare my weakness
and give up the training;
I will return to the lower life."

And he does go to the Park
and says to the monks:

"Good sirs, I burn with passion;
I am overcome by passion;
I cannot stay the course of the godly life;
I declare my weakness
and give up the training;
I will return to the lower life." Then[7] they who live the godly life admonish him and warn him, saying:

"Good air, the Exalted One has said:

But little satisfying[8]
is this lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow.

Like a piece[9] of bone
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a lump of meat[10]
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a fire-stick made of grass
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a pit of glowing embers[11]
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a passing dream[12]
is lust,
fraught as it is

with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like some borrowed bravery
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like ripe fruit on a broken branch
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a chopper in the shambles[13]
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a spear and javelin[14]
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a hooded snake
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

—so the Exalted One has said.

Find your delight, reverend sir,
in the godly life;

declare not your weakness, reverend sir,
nor give up the training
nor return to the lower life!"

And he thus admonished,
thus warned,
by those who live the godly life,
replies thuswise:

"Good sirs, although the Exalted One has said lust is but little satisfying, fraught as it is with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;
yet I am not able to stay the course of the godly life, but I will declare my weakness, give up the training
and return to the lower life.'

Monks, just as the warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
and as he dares and strives
the enemy wound him
and wounded by the enemy,
he is carried to his relations
and they nurse him and care for him,
but he dies of that hurt:
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here this sort of person.

This, monks, is the third kind of person,
like a warrior,

found among monks.

▪

Again, monks, take the case of a monk
who lives dependent on some village or town —
while it is yet early,
he robes himself and with bowl and cloak
enters that village or town for alms,
just with his body under no restraint,
with speech unrestrained,
with mind unrestrained,
without mindfulness being set up,
with his faculties uncontrolled;
and there he sees a woman
with dress disordered
or not properly dressed,
and at the sight
passion overwhelms his mind;
in that state,
he burns in body,
he burns in mind;
and the thought comes to him:

What if I go to the Park
and say to the monks:

"Good sirs, I burn with passion;
I am overcome by passion;
I cannot stay the course of the godly life;
I declare my weakness
and give up the training;
I will return to the lower life."

And he does go to the Park
and says to the monks:

"Good sirs, I burn with passion;
I am overcome by passion;
I cannot stay the course of the godly life;
I declare my weakness
and give up the training;
I will return to the lower life."

Then they who live the godly [80] life
admonish him and warn him, saying:

"Good air, the Exalted One has said:

But little satisfying
is this lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow.

Like a piece of bone
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a lump of meat
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a fire-stick made of grass
is lust,
fraught as it is

with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a pit of glowing embers
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a passing dream
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like some borrowed bravery
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like ripe fruit on a broken branch
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a chopper in the shambles
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a spear and javelin
is lust,
fraught as it is

with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

like a hooded snake
is lust,
fraught as it is
with ill and tribulation,
with perils worse to follow;

—so the Exalted One has said.

Find your delight, reverend sir,
in the godly life;
declare not your weakness, reverend sir,
nor give up the training
nor return to the lower life!"

And he thus admonished,
thus warned,
by those who live the godly life,
replies thuswise:

"Good sirs, I will dare and strive;[15]
I will find my delight in the godly life;
not now will I declare my weakness,
nor give up the training,
nor return to the lower life."

Monks, just as the warrior warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
and as he dares and strives
the enemy wound him
and wounded by the enemy,
he is carried to his relations

and they nurse him and care for him,
is cured of that hurt;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here this sort of person.

This, monks, is the fourth kind of person,
like a warrior,
found among monks.

▪

Then, monks, there is the monk
who lives dependent on some village or town.

While it is yet early,
he robes himself and with bowl and cloak enters the village or town for alms, with his body, speech and mind restrained,
with mindfulness set up,
with his faculties under control:
and on seeing some form with his eye,
he is not entranced with its appearance
nor with any detail of it;
since by abiding uncontrolled
in the sense of sight,
covetousness,
dejection,
wicked and evil states
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the sense of sight;

he restrains the sense of sight
and wins mastery over it;

so too, on hearing some sound with his ear,
he is not entranced with its appearance
nor with any detail of it;
since by abiding uncontrolled
in the sense of hearing,
covetousness,
dejection,
wicked and evil states
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the sense of hearing;
he restrains the sense of hearing
and wins mastery over it;

on smelling some scent with his nose,
he is not entranced with its appearance
nor with any detail of it;
since by abiding uncontrolled
in the sense of smell,
covetousness,
dejection,
wicked and evil states
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the sense of smell;
he restrains the sense of smell
and wins mastery over it;

on tasting some savour with his tongue,
he is not entranced with its appearance
nor with any detail of it;
since by abiding uncontrolled
in the sense of taste,
covetousness,
dejection,

wicked and evil states
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the sense of taste;
he restrains the sense of taste
and wins mastery over it;

on touching some touch with his body,
he is not entranced with its appearance
nor with any detail of it;
since by abiding uncontrolled
in the sense of touch,
covetousness,
dejection,
wicked and evil states
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the sense of touch;
he restrains the sense of touch
and wins mastery over it;

and in respect of ideas that pass through his mind;, he is not entranced with their appearance nor with any detail of them;
since by abiding uncontrolled
in the sense of mind,
covetousness,
dejection,
wicked and evil states
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the sense of mind;
he restrains the sense of mind
and wins mastery over it[16]

And on his return from alms-gathering, when his meal is over, he goes off to some secluded spot:
forest,
tree-root,

mountain,
glen,
rock-cave,
cemetery,
wooded upland,
open space
or heap of straw;
and come to forest,
tree-root
or empty hut,
he sits cross-legged,
with body erect,
setting mindfulness in front of him.

Putting away all hankering,
he abides with heart free therefrom;
he cleanses his mind of hankering;

patting away ill-will and hatred,
he abides with heart free therefrom;
kindly and compassionate to all creatures,
he cleanses his mind of ill-will and hatred:

putting away sloth and torpor,
he abides free therefrom;
conscious of light,
mindful and self-possessed,
he cleanses his mind of sloth and torpor:

putting away flurry and worry,
he abides poised;
with heart serene within,
he cleanses his mind of flurry and worry:

putting away doubt,
be abides with doubt passed by;

no more he questions "Why?"
of right things;
he cleanses his mind of doubt.

Putting away these five hindrances,
when the mind's corruptions are weakened by insight,
aloof from sensuous appetites
enters and abides in the first musing,
wherein applied and sustained thought works,
which is born of solitude
and is full of joy and ease;

suppressing applied and sustained thought,
he enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of zest and ease,
free from applied and sustained thought,
and there the mind becomes calm and one-pointed;

free from the fervour of zest,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease;

putting away ease
and by putting away ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill.

With the heart thus serene,
purified,
cleansed,
spotless,
devoid of defilement,
supple,
ready to act,
firm and imperturbable,
he bends the mind to know
the destruction of the cankers.

As it really is, he understands:

This is Ill —

as it really is, he understands:

This is the origin of Ill —

as it really is, he understands:

This is the ending of Ill —

as it really is, he understands:

This is the way leading to the ending of Ill.

As it really is, he understands the thought;

These are the cankers —

This the origin of the cankers —

This the ending of the cankers —

This the way leading to the ending of the cankers.

Knowing this,
seeing this,
his heart is free from the canker of lust,
free from the canker of becomings,
free from the canker of ignorance,
and in the freedom
comes the knowledge of that freedom,
and he knows:

Birth is destroyed;
lived is the godly life;
done is what had to be done;
there is no more of this state.

[81] Monks, just as the warrior,
grasping his sword and shield,
binding on his bow and quiver,
goes down into the thick of the fight;
victorious in battle,
winning the fight,
he continues at the head of the battle;
like that, monks, I say,
is this person.

Monks, there is here this sort of person.

This, monks, is the fifth kind of person,
like a warrior,
found among monks.

Monks, these are the five kinds of persons
like warriors,
are found in the world.'

---

[1] This is stock; Cf. Vin. ii, 102; M. i, 68; ii, 99.

[2] This recurs at S. iv, 308; our text with S. reads pariyādentī, Comy. pariyādentī ti, pariyādiyanti, S.e. pariyādiyanti.

[3] Upalikkhanti, to scotch.

[4] Comy. they come with his own bed (stretcher).

[5] For the whole of this para, see S. ii, 231, 271; Cf. also iv, 122; below VI, § 60.

[6] Our text reads rāgapariyuṭṭhito, but S.e. and Comy. with v.l. rāgāyito, which I suppose is simply the pp. of the denominative of rāga., P.E.D. omits; Comy. explains: rāgena ratio.

[7] These ten similes recur at M. i, 130; Vin. ii, 25; J. v, 210; Thig. 487-91. Seven are explained in full at M. i, 364 ff. In trsl. I have expanded a little. It is curious Comy. does not refer to Majjhima.

[8] Cf. Dhp. 186; J. ii, 313; iv, 118; Vism. 124.

[9] Text -saṅkhala, but Comy. and S.e. kaṅkala, with v.l.

[10] Comy. Bahu-sādhāranaṭṭhena, Cf. Mil. 280.

[11] Sn. 396; J. iv, 118; A. iv, 224; v. 175; Cf. S. iv, 188.

[12] Cf. Shakespeare's Sonnet 129.

[13] Asi-sūnā. Comy. adhikuṭṭanaṭṭhena.

[14] S. i, 128; Thig. 58;[but ?] Vism. 341.

[15] Comy. and S.e. with v.l. read dhārayissami.

[16] This is a stock passage; see D. i, 70; M. i, 269; A. ii, 39; DhS. trsl. 351.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 77

Paṭhama Anāgata-Bhaya Suttaṃ

Fear in the Way (a)

---

[81]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five fears in the way[1]
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
forest-gone,
ought to live

just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

What five?

Take the case of a monk,
forest-gone,
who reflects thus:

"I am now quite alone in the forest;
and living here alone,
a snake may bite me,
a scorpion may bite me,
or a centipede may bite me,[2]
and cause my death;
and that would be a hindrance to me.

Behold now,
I will put forth energy
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.[3]

▪

Monks, this is the first fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
forest-gone,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Again take the case of a monk,
forest-gone,
who reflects thus:

"I am now quite alone in the forest;
and living here alone,
I may stumble and fall;
the food I have eaten may make me ill;
bile may convulse me;
phlegm choke me;
wind within stab and shake me,[4]
and cause my death;
and that would be a hindrance to me.

Behold now,
I will put forth energy
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

Monks, this is the second fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
forest-gone,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Again take the case of a monk,
forest-gone,
who reflects thus:

"I am now quite alone in the forest;
and living here alone,
an I consort with fearsome creatures:
lion,
tiger,
leopard,
bear
or hyena[5] —
they may take my life
and cause my death;
and that would be a hindrance to me.

Behold now,
I will put forth energy
[82] to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

Monks, this is the third fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
forest-gone,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Again take the case of a monk,
forest-gone,
who reflects thus:

"I am now quite alone in the forest;
and living here alone,
an I consort with thieves,[6] who either have done their deed or go about to do it,[7]
they may take my life
and cause my death;
and that would be a hindrance to me..

Behold now,
I will put forth energy
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

Monks, this is the fourth fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
forest-gone,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Moreover, monks, the monk,
forest-gone,
reflects thus:

"I am now quite alone in the forest;
and living here alone,
and there are fearsome non-humans[8] here.

They may take my life
and cause my death;
and that would be a hindrance to me.

Behold now,
I will put forth energy
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

Monks, this is the fifth fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
forest-gone,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

Monks, these are the five fears in the way from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
forest-gone,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.'

[1] Anāgata, not come, future.

[2] This is a stock set; see A. ii, 73; iv, 320; Vin. ii, 110; below VI, § 20.

[3] Cf. D. iii, 255; A. iv, 332 for this passage.

[4] This set is at A. iv, 320 and below loc. cit.

[5] Cf. J. v, 416; Mil. 149 and Vin. iii, 58.

[6] Māṇavehi. Comy. corehi; Cf. DA. i, 36, quoting our passage.

[7] See Vism. 180. Mp. says they take the throat-blood (gala-lohita) and make an offering to the devas.

[8] Comy. harsh, evil yakkhas.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

VIII. The Warrior

Sutta 78

Dutiya Anāgata-Bhaya Suttaṃ

Fear in the Way (b)

---

[82]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five fears in the way[1]
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,

to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

What five?

Take the case of a monk who reflects thus:

"I am now young,
a mere youth,
black-haired
and blessed with the beauty of youth,
the heyday of youth,[2] the prime of youth;
but time will be
when old age shall touch this body:
and when grown old
and overcome by age,
not easy is it
to turn to the Buddhas' word,
not easy things
are forest-wilderness,
the outland bed and seat, to seek.

Ere[3] that state come to me —
unwelcome,
undesired,
unloved —
lof I will put forth energy
against that time
even to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered, [83] to realize the unrealized,
and of that state possessed
I will dwell comforted even when old.

Monks, this is the first fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,

ardent,
resolute monk,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Again take the case of a monk who reflects thus:

I have health and well-being,
a good digestion
which is neither over-cold
nor over-heated,
but even and suitable for striving;[4] but time will be when sickness shall touch this body;
and sick and ill,
not easy is it
to turn to the Buddhas' word,
not easy things
are forest-wilderness,
the outland bed and seat, to seek.

Ere that state come to me —
unwelcome,
undesired,
unloved —
lof I will put forth energy
against that time
even to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered, to realize the unrealized,
and of that state possessed
I will dwell comforted even when sick.

Monks, this is the second fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Again take the case of a monk who reflects thus:

Now is there no famine
and crops are good,
food is easy to get
and it is easy
to keep oneself going
by gleanings and favours;
but time will be
when there is a famine, bad crops,
and difficulty in getting food, nor will it be easy
to keep oneself going
by gleanings and favours;
and the famine-stricken men will move to where there is ample food, and there one will dwell in a crowd and a throng:
and where such conditions are,
not easy is it
to turn to the Buddhas' word,
not easy things

are forest-wilderness,
the outland bed and seat, to seek.

Ere that state come to me —
unwelcome,
undesired,
unloved —
lof I will put forth energy
against that time
even to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered, to realize the unrealized,
and of that state possessed
I will dwell comforted even in time of famine.

Monks, this is the third fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Again take the case of a monk who reflects thus:

Now men dwell in friendly fellowship together,
as mingled milk and water,
they do not quarrel,
but look upon one another with friendly eye;
but time will be
when fear is about,
perils of robbers,
and the country-folk mount their carts

and drive away,
and the fear-stricken men will move away
to where there is safety, and there one will live in crowds and throngs:
and where such conditions are,
not easy is it
to turn to the Buddhas' word,
not easy things
are forest-wilderness,
the outland bed and seat, to seek.

Ere that state come to me —
unwelcome,
undesired,
unloved —
lof I will put forth energy
against that time
even to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered, to realize the unrealized,
and of that state possessed
I will dwell comforted even in time of fear.

Monks, this is the fourth fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

▪

Moreover, monks, the monk reflects thus:

Now the Order lives in friendly fellowship together,
finding comfort in one teaching;
but the time will come when the Order will be rent:
and when that happens,
not easy is it to turn to the Buddhas' word,
not easy things
are forest-wilderness,
the outland [84] bed and seat, to seek.

Ere that state come to me —
unwelcome,
undesired,
unloved —
lof I will put forth energy
against that time
even to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered, to realize the unrealized,
and of that state possessed
I will dwell comforted even though the Order be rent.

Monks, this is the fifth fear in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,
ardent,
resolute monk,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

Monks, these are the five fears in the way
from contemplating which
the earnest,

ardent,
resolute monk,
ought to live
just to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

---

[1] This is the same as in the preceding sutia, but with ārañña, forest gone, omitted.

[2] See above, § 54.

[3] Following the Comy. I have punctuated differently from the text.

[4] Cf. above, § 63 and § 54 for the following passages.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Chapter VIII
The Warrior

Sutta 79

Tatiya Anāgata-Bhaya Suttaṃ

Fear in the Way (c)

---

[84]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five fears in the way,
which have not yet arisen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for them;
and, being awake,
strive to get rid of them.

What five?

Monks, there will be, in the long road of the future,
monks who have not made body become,[1]
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
and those who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become
will cause the acceptance[2] of others,
and verily they will not be able to lead them
in the way of higher virtue,
higher mind,
higher insight:
and they too will become monks
who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
and those who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
will cause the acceptance of others,
and verily they will not be able to lead them
in the way of higher virtue,
higher mind,
higher insight:
and they too will become monks
who have not made body become,

not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become.

Thus verily, monks,
from corrupt Dhamma
comes corrupt Discipline;
from corrupt Discipline
corrupt Dhamma.

Monks, this is the first fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Again, monks who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
will give guidance[3] to others,
and verily they will not be able to lead them
in the way of higher virtue,
higher mind,
higher in- [85] sight
and those too who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
will give guidance to others,
and verily they will not be able to lead them
in the way of higher virtue,

higher mind,
higher insight:
and they too will become monks
who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become.

Thua verily, monks,
from corrupt Dhamma
comes corrupt Discipline;
from corrupt Discipline
corrupt Dhamma.

Monks, this is the second fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Again, monks who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
when giving a talk on more-Dhamma[4] or on the runes,[5]
will not be fully awake (to the meaning), but will enter on a state of darkness.[6]

Thus verily, monks,
from corrupt Dhamma
comes corrupt Discipline;

from corrupt Discipline
corrupt Dhamma.

Monks, this is the third fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Again, monks who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
will not listen,
lend an ear,
set up an understanding mind
or deem such things should be grasped and mastered, when those sayings,[7]
spoken by the Tathāgata, deep,
deep in meaning,
world-beyond,
dealing with the void,
are recited;
but to the sayings of poets,
mere poems,
just a show of words and phrases,
the works of outsiders,
declaimed by their disciples —
to such, when recited, they will listen,
lend an ear,

set up an understanding mind
and deem such things should be grasped and mastered.[8]

Thus indeed, monks,
from corrupt Dhamma
comes corrupt Discipline;
from corrupt Discipline
corrupt Dhamma.

Monks, this is the fourth fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Moreover, monks, there will be
in the long road of the future
monks who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
and those elders who have not made body become,
not made virtue become,
not made mind become,
not made insight become;
will become luxurious,[9]
lax,
prime-movers in backsliding,[10]
shirking [86] the burden of the secluded life;
and they will put forth no effort
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,

to realize the unrealized;
and the folk who come after them
will fall into the way of (wrong) views:[11]
and they too will become luxurious,
lax,
prime-movers in backsliding,
shirking the burden of the secluded life,
and will put forth no effort
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

Thus indeed, monks,
from corrupt Dhamma
comes corrupt Discipline;
from corrupt Discipline
corrupt Dhamma.

Monks, this is the fifth fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Monks, these are the five fears in the way,
which have not yet arisen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for them;
and, being awake,
strive to get rid of them.[12]

[1] Abhāvita-kayā — untrained in body.

[2] Upasampādessanti, they will cause their acceptance as full monks.

[3] Nissayaṃ dassanti, see Childers, 291; P.E.D. omits this expression. The period of tutelage is at least five years.

[4] Abhidhamma. Comy. uttama-dhamma.

[5] Vedalla, Comy. Veda-paṭisaṃyuttaṃ ñāṇa-missaka-kathaṃ. See Exp. i, 33. They are suttas in the form of questions — e.g., F.Dial. i, 213; Dial. ii, 229.

[6] Kaṇhaṃ dhammaṃ; Cf. Dhp. 87; A. v, 253; K.S. v, 22. Comy. by looking for defects, mocking, preaching for gain and honour.

[7] Suttantā, an honorific way of referring to suttas.

[8] This passage recurs at S. ii, 267; A. i, 73; see G.S. i, 08.

[9] Cf. M. i, 14, iii 6; A. ii, 148; below V, §150.

[10] Okkamane pubbaṅgamā.

[11] Cf. Vin. ii, 108; S. ii, 203.

[12] At Dial. i, xiii, Rhys Davids observes that this sutta is the one referred to by Asoka in his Bhabra Edict -, but it is not clear why this of the four Anagatabhayani suttas is picked out.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
8. Yodhājīva Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter VIII The Warrior

Sutta 80

Catuttha Anāgata-Bhaya Suttaṃ

Fear in the Way (d)

---

[86]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five fears in the way,
which have not yet arisen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for them;
and, being awake,
strive to get rid of them.

What five?

Monks, there will be,
in the long road of the future,
monks who long for fine[1] robes;
and they, with this longing,
will leave the ways of wearing rags,
will leave the forest wilderness,
the out-land bed and seat;
will move to village,
town
or rajah's capital[2]
and make their dwelling there;
and because of a robe,
they will commit many things
unseemly,
unfit.[3]

Monks, this is the first fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Again, monks, there will be,
in the long road of the future,
monks who will long for rich[1] alms-food;
and they, with this longing,
will leave the ways of the common round,
the forest wilderness,
the out-land bed and seat;
will move to village,
town
or rajah's capital

and make their dwelling there;
seeking out, as it were
with the tip of the tongue, tasty morsels;
and because of alms-food,
they will commit many things
unseemly,
unfit.

[87] Monks, this is the second fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Again, monks, there will be,
in the long road of the future,
monks who will long for a goodly bed and seat;
and they, with this longing,
will leave the ways of the tree-root abode,
the forest wilderness,
the out-land bed and seat;
will move to village,
town
or rajah's capital
and make their dwelling there;
and because of a bed and seat,
they will commit things
unseemly,
unfit.

Monks, this is the third fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Again, monks, there will be,
in the long road of the future,
monks who will live in company with nuns
and novices in training;
and when this shall be,
it may be expected
that the monks will take no delight
in leading the godly life;
and either they will commit some foul act or give up the training
and return to the lower life.

Monks, this is the fourth fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

▪

Moreover, monks, there will be
in the long road of the future
monks who will live in company with the park folk

and novices;
and when this shall be,
it may be expected
that they will live and feast themselves on the plenty of hoarded stocks[4] and will mark out their lands and crops.

Monks, this is the fifth fear in the way which,
though not yet risen,
will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for it;
and being awake,
strive to get rid of it.

Monks, these are the five fears in the way,
which have not yet arisen,
which will arise in the future.

Be ye fully awake for them;
and, being awake,
strive to get rid of them.

---

[1] Kalyāṇa. Comy. sundara.

[2] Rājadhāni.

[3] This passage recurs at S. ii, 194 (quoted at Mil. 401).

[4] Sannidhi-kāraka-paribhoga; this was not permitted, see Vin. ii, 206 ff.; D. iii, 235 (impossible for arahants); A. iv, 370; M. i, 523.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 81

Rājaniya Suttaṃ

Enticing

---

[87]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.[1]

What five?

He[2] is enticed by the enticing;
corrupted by the corrupting;
infatuated by the infatuating;
angered by the angering;
maddened by the maddening.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

▪

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear
pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He is not enticed by the enticing;
not corrupted by the corrupting;
not infatuated by the infatuating;
not angered by the angering;
not maddened by the maddening.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear

pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

---

[1] Bhāvanīyo. See Introduction.

[2] Cf. Mil. 386.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 82

Vītarāga Suttaṃ

Free of Passion

---

[88]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

What five?

He is not free of passion,
nor of corruption,
nor of infatuation,
and is full of cant
and deceit.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

§

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear
pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He is free of passion,
corruption,
infatuation,
cant
and deceit.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear

pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 83

Kuhaka Suttaṃ

The Trickster

---

[88]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

What five?

He is a trickster,[1]
a ranter,
an insinuator,
a dissembler,[2]
one who seeks to add gain to gain.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

§

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear
pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He is no trickster,
is not a ranter,
not an insinuator,
not a dissembler,
not one who seeks to add gain to gain.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear

pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

---

[1] Cf. Vism. 23 (trsl. 27 ff.); D. i, 8 (Dial. i, 16); DA. i, 91.

[2] Nippesiko. Comy. nippiṃsanak'atthāya samannāgato.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 84

Assaddha Suttaṃ

Faith

---

[88]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

What five?

He is without faith,
modesty,
fear of blame,
is lazy
and lacks insight.[1]

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

§

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear
pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He has faith,
modesty,
fear of blame,
is not lazy
and possesses insight.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear

pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

---

[1] Cf. M. i, 43; S. ii, 150; D. iii, 252; below V, § 101.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 85

Akkhama Suttaṃ

He Cannot Endure

---

[88]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

What five?

He[1] cannot endure forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes
and touches.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes neither dear
nor pleasant
nor respected
nor what he ought to become.

▪

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear
pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He endures forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes
and touches.

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear

pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

---

[1] Akkhama, Cf. below V, § 130. Comy. rūpārammaṇaṃ anadhivāsako hoti tad-ārammaṇehi rāgādīhi abhibhuyyati.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 86

Paṭisambidā-Patta Suttaṃ

Analysis

---

[89]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
an elder becomes dear and pleasant,
respected and what he ought to become.

He is a master of logical analysis;
a master in analysing causal relations;
a master of grammatical analysis;
a master in analyzing things knowable;[1]

what things have to be done by his fellow-men, living the godly life,
either great or small,
therein he is able and active,
alive to investigating such matters;
ready to do and get them done.[2]

Monks, possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
an elder becomes dear and pleasant, respected and what he ought to become.

---

[1] See discussion on these terms at Pts. of Contr. 377 ff. On these terms our Comy. observes: pañcasu atthesu pabhedagatañāṇaṃ patto; catubbhidhe dhamme ...; dhamma-niruttisu ...; tesu tīṇi ñāṇesu ...

[2] For this passage see above, §33; Vin. i, 70; A. v, 24

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 87

Sīla Suttaṃ

Virtue

---

[89]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī
and there he addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if an elder monk be possessed of five[1] qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear
pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He is virtuous,
abides restrained by the restraint of the Obligations,
is perfect in conduct and habit,
sees peril in the smallest fault,
accepts the training
and trains himself accordantly.[2]

▪

He is learned,
with mind retentive and well stored;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,[3]
which set forth in spirit and in letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory.[4]

▪

He has a pleasant voice,
a good enunciation,
is urbane in speech,
distinct,
free from hoarseness
and informative.[5]

▪

At will,
easily and without trouble,

he attains to the four states of musing,
which bring comfort
both here and now,
transcending thought.

■

By destroying the cankers
he enters and abides in the emancipation of the heart
and of insight,
which is free [90] of the cankers,
and this state he knows and realizes for himself,
even in this life.[6]

Monks, if he be possessed of these five qualities,
among his fellows in the godly life
he becomes dear
pleasant
respected
and what he ought to become.

---

[1] Cf. below V, §§ 166, 232.

[2] A. iv, 140; D. iii, 78; It. 96 and passim.

[3] Cf. Mrs. Rhys Davids' Sakya, p. 73; Manual, p. 161.

[4] A. iv, 6; D. iii, 267, etc.

[5] A. iv, 279; M. ii, 166; D. iii, 115.

[6] A, iv, 140 for both clauses.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 88

Thera Suttaṃ

The Elder

---

[90]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities,
the way[1] of an elder monk
is not to the advantage of many folk,
is not for the happiness of many folk,
is not for the good of many folk;
it is to the harm and ill of devas and men.

Of what five?

There is the elder,
time-honoured[2] and long gone forth;

▪

well-known,
renowned,
with a great following of householders
and those gone forth;

▪

a receiver of the requisites;
the robes,
alms,
lodgings
and medicaments for sickness;

▪

who is learned,
has a retentive and well-stored mind,
and those Dhammas,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and in letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory;

▪

but he is a wrong viewer with perverted vision.

He turns away many folk from Saddhamma and sets them in what is not Saddhamma.

Thus though he be an elder,
time-honoured and long gone forth,
through him they fall into the way of wrong views;

▪

though the elder be well-known,
renowned,
with a great following of householders
and those gone forth,
through him they fall into the way of wrong views;

▪

though the elder be a receiver of the requisites;
the robes,
alms,
lodgings
and medicaments for sickness;
through him they fall into the way of wrong views;

▪

though the elder be learned
and has a retentive and well-stored mind,
through him they fall into the way of wrong views.

Monks, possessed of these five qualities,
the way of an elder monk
is not to the advantage of many folk,
is not for the happiness of many folk,
is not for the good of many folk;
it is to the harm and ill of devas and men.

§

Monks, possessed of five qualities,
the way of an elder monk
is to the advantage of many folk,
is for the happiness of many folk,
is for the good of many folk;
it is to the benefit and good of devas and men.[ed1]

Of what five?

There is the elder,
time-honoured and long gone forth;

▪

well-known,
renowned,
with a great following of householders
and those gone forth;

▪

a receiver of the requisites;
the robes,
alms,
lodgings
and medicaments for sickness;

▪

who is learned,
has a retentive and well-stored mind,

and those Dhammas,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and in letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory;

▪

and he is a right viewer with unperverted vision.

He sets many folk in Saddhamma and turns them away from what is not Saddhamma.

Thus he be an elder,
time-honoured and long gone forth,
through him they attain to the way of right views;

▪

though the elder be well-known,
renowned,
with a great following of householders
and those gone forth,
through him they attain to the way of right views;

▪

though the elder be a receiver of the requisites;
the robes,

alms,
lodgings
and medicaments for sickness;
through him they attain to the way of right views;

■

though the elder be learned
and has a retentive and well-stored mind,
through him they attain to the way of right views.

Monks, possessed of these five qualities,
the way of an elder monk
is to the advantage of many folk,
is for the happiness of many folk,
is for the good of many folk;
it is to the benefit and good of devas and men.

---

[1] Rattaññā.

[2] Paṭipanna.

[ed1] Hare abridges this whole section with the words "Just the opposite qualities) so the precise translation he would have used here of certain opposites is not known and is just a best guess.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 89

Paṭhama Sekha Suttaṃ

The Monk in Training (a)

---

[91]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five conditions lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

What five?

Delight in business;[1]
delight in gossip;
delight in sleeping;

delight in company;
and he does not reflect on the mind as freed.[2]

Monks, these are the five conditions, that lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

§

Monks, these five conditions
do not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

What five?

Non-delight in business;
Non-delight in gossip;
Non-delight in sleeping;
Non-delight in company;
and he does reflect on the mind as freed.

Monks, these are the five conditions,
that do not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 22; It. 72; below VI, §§ 14, 21. Busmess = kamma.

[2] Yathāvimuttaṃ cittaṃ na paccavekkhati. Comy. as if it were a mind freed (yathāssa cittaṃ vimuttaṃ); the faults got rid of and the good won — he reflects on those, but makes no effort to win higher ones. Cf. below V, § 95 ff.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
9. Thera Vagga

The Book of the Fives

IX. The Elder

Sutta 90

Dutiya Sekha Suttaṃ

The Monk in Training (b)

---

[91]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five conditions
lead to the decline of a monk in training.

What five?

Monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who is always busy
and has much to do
and is clever at work;

he lets the time for going apart slip by,
nor does he apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the first condition
that leads to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Again monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who spends the day
in doing small things
and lets the time for going apart slip by,
nor does he apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the second condition
that leads to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Again monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who lives in company with householders
and those gone forth,
in laymen's company which is not meet
and lets the time for going apart slip by,
nor does he apply himself
to calming the heart within.[1]

This, monks, is the third condition
that leads to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Again monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who enters the village too early and leaves it too late
and lets the time for going apart slip by,
nor does he apply himself
to calming the heart within.[2]

This, monks, is the fourth condition
that leads to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Moreover, monks, such talk as is austere
and a help to opening the heart;[3]
talk on wanting little,
on contentment,
on loneliness,
on not keeping company,
on strenuous endeavour,
[92] on virtue,
on concentration,
on insight,
on emancipation
and on the knowledge and vision of emancipation —
that the monk in training cannot obtain at will,
easily and without difficulty;
and he lets the time for going apart slip by,
nor docs he apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the fifth condition
that leads to the decline

of a monk in training.

Monks, these are the five conditions which lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

§

Monks, these five conditions
do not lead to the decline of a monk in training.[ed1]

What five?'

Monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who is not always busy is clever at work
but does not have much to do
he does not let the time for going apart slip by,
he does apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the first condition
that does not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Again monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who does not spend the day
in doing small things

he does not let the time for going apart slip by,
he does apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the second condition
that does not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Again monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who does not live in company with householders
and those gone forth,
in laymen's company which is not meet
he does not let the time for going apart slip by,
he does apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the third condition
that does not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Again monks, take the case
of a monk in training
who does not enter the village too early and leave it too late
he does not let the time for going apart slip by,
he does apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the fourth condition
that does not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

▪

Moreover, monks, such talk as is austere
and a help to opening the heart;
talk on wanting little,
on contentment,
on loneliness,
on not keeping company,
on strenuous endeavour,
on virtue,
on concentration,
on insight,
on emancipation
and on the knowledge and vision of emancipation —
that the monk in training obtains at will,
easily and without difficulty;
he does not let the time for going apart slip by,
he does apply himself
to calming the heart within.

This, monks, is the fifth condition
that does not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

Monks, these are the five conditions which do not lead to the decline
of a monk in training.

---

[1] Cf. Vin. ii, 7; below V, § 223; Comy. not in accord with (the Master's message).

[2] Vin. i, 70; M. i, 469; S. i, 201 (K.S. i, 256, the case of Nāgadatta).

[3] Citta-vivaraṇa-saṅkhātānaṃ; Cf. A. iv, 352; v, 67; M. iii, 113; Ud. 36.

[ed1] Hare has abridged this entire section with '(Just the opposite conditions' The text repeats in full' But whereas in the Pali the opposites are easily constructed by just applying 'na' to the previous, in English and especially in Hare's translation the opposites are not so easily formed. I have followed Hare as closely as possible, but some differences were impossible to avoid.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
10. Kakudha Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 91

Paṭhama Sampadā Suttaṃ

Achievements

---

[92]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five achievements.[1]

What five?

The perfecting of faith,
the perfecting of virtue,
the perfecting of learning,
the perfecting of charity,
and the perfecting of insight.

Verily, monks, these are the five achievements.'

[1] Sampadā, Cf. D. iii, 235 and below V, § 130 for a different set. cf. above, Nos. 46, 65. We have no coincident word for sampadā. 'Perfection' is too high in meaning. 'Success' might be fairly adequate, but has for us no religious associations. Cf. the saying, Dial., 'Work out your own salvation.' This is very free, but indicates the long arduous procedure.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
10. Kakudha Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 92

Dutiya Sampadā Suttaṃ

Achievements (b)

---

[92]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five achievements.

What five?

The perfecting of virtue,
the perfecting of concentration,
the perfecting of insight,
the perfecting of emancipation,
the perfecting of the knowledge and vision of emancipation.

Verily, monks, these are the five achievements.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
10. Kakudha Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 93

Añña-Vyākaraṇa Suttaṃ

Avowal

---

[92]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five avowals of gnosis.[1]

What five?

One will avow gnosis through folly and blindness;[2]
one [93] filled with evil desires and longings;
one being foolish with mind tossed up and down[3]
one through overweening pride; and one will avow gnosis from the fullness[4] of knowledge.

Monks, these are the five avowals of gnosis. '

[1] Cf. Vin. v, 189; Brethr. p. xxxiii.

[2] Mandattā momūhattā; our colloquial 'soft' is manda. Cf. M. i, 520; below V, § 141.

[3] Cittakkhepā, as the Psalmist (cix, -23). Cf. S. I, 120.

[4] Samma-d-eva. Comy. hetunā, nayena, kāraṇna.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
10. Kakudha Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 94

Phāsu-Vihāra Suttaṃ

Comfort

---

[93]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five abodes of comfort.[1]

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk, aloof from sensuous appetites,
aloof from evil ideas,
enters and abides in the first musing,
wherein applied and sustained thought works,
which is born of solitude
and is full of joy and ease.

▪

Suppressing applied and sustained thought,
he enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of zest and ease,
free from applied and sustained thought,
and there the mind becomes calm and one-pointed.

▪

Free from the fervour of zest,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease.

▪

Putting away ease
and by putting away ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill.

▪

By the destruction of the cankers,
he enters and abides in
the realization of mind-emancipation and insight-emancipation,
which is free of the cankers,
fully comprehending those states himself,
even in this world.

Monks, these are the five abodes of comfort.'

---

[1] Cf. below V, § 105.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
Kakudha vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 95

Akuppa Suttaṃ

The Immovable

---

[93]

[1 THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities a monk in no long time will penetrate the immovable.[1]

Of what five?

He is a master of logical analysis;
a master in analysing causal relations;
a master of grammatical analysis;
a master in analysing things knowable;[2]
and he reflects on the mind as freed.[3]

Monks, possessed of these five qualities a monk in no long time will penetrate the immovable.'

---

[1] Akuppa, lit. unshaking. Comy. arahattaṃ.

[2] Above, § 86.

[3] Above, § 89.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
Kakudha vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 96

Suta-Dhara Suttaṃ

The Learned

---

[93]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities a monk,
practising awareness
in breathing in and breathing out,[1]
will in no long time penetrate the immovable.

Of what five?

[94] He is set on little,[2]
busied in little,
frugal,
well content with life's necessities;
taking food in little, he serves not his own belly;[3] slothful in little, he is heedful in vigilance;

he is learned,
with a retentive and well-stored mind;
those things, lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle
and lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety
— those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in mind,
fully understood in theory;
and he reflects on the mind as freed.

"Monks, possessed of five qualities a monk,
practising awareness
in breathing in and breathing out,
will in no long time penetrate the immovable.

---

[1]Ānāpānasati, see K.S. v, 257 ff. [? This must mean KS 5 pg 275; there is nothing on this at 257] and references there.

[2]Appaṭṭha; cf. this first quality with It. 72; Sn 144

[3]Anodarikattam anuyutto; cf. Romans xvi, 18

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
Kakudha vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 97

Tatiya Akuppa Suttaṃ

Talk

---

[94]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities
a monk, cultivating awareness
in breathing in and breathing out,
will in no long time penetrate the immovable.

Of what five?

He is set on little,
busied in little,
frugal,
well content with life's necessities;

▪

taking food in little,
he serves not his own belly;

▪

slothful in little,
he is heedful in vigilance;

▪

Moreover, monks, such talk as is austere
and a help to opening the heart;
talk on wanting little,
on contentment,
on loneliness,
on not keeping company,
on strenuous endeavour,
on virtue,
on concentration,
on insight,
on emancipation
and on the knowledge and vision of emancipation —
that he can obtain at will,
easily and without difficulty;

▪

and he reflects on the mind as freed.

Monks, possessed of these five qualities cultivating awareness
in breathing in and breathing out,
will in no long time penetrate the immovable.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
Kakudha vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 98

Catuttha Akuppa Suttaṃ

Forest

---

[94]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities a monk,
making much of awareness
in breathing in and breathing out,
will in no long time penetrate the immovable.

Of what five?

He is set on little,
busied in little,
frugal,
well content with life's necessities;

▪

taking food in little,
he serves not his own belly;

▪

slothful in little, he is heedful in vigilance;

▪

he is a forest-dweller with outland bed and seat;

▪

and he reflects on the mind as freed.

Monks, possessed of these five qualities,
making much of awareness
in breathing in and breathing out,
will in no long time penetrate the immovable.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
X. Kakudha vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 99

Sīha Suttaṃ

Lion

---

[94]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, at eventide the lion,
king of beasts,
leaves his lair;
he stretches himself;
he looks around on the four quarters;
three times he roars his lion-roar;
then he goes forth to hunt.[1]

[95] Monks, if he strike a blow at an elephant,
he strikes verily with care,
not without care;

if he strike a blow at a buffalo,
he strikes verily with care,
not without care;

if he strike a blow at an ox,
he strikes verily with care,
not without care;

if he strike a blow at a leopard,
he strikes verily with care,
not without care;

if he strike a blow at any small creature, be it bat
a hare
or cat,
he strikes with care,
not without care.

And why?

He thinks:

Let not my skill[2] fail me!

§

A[3] lion, monks,
that is a name for the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened.

Verily, monks,
when the Tathāgata teaches Dhamma in assembly,
that is his lion-roar;

and if the Tathāgata teach Dhamma to the monks,
he teaches with care,
not without care;

if the Tathāgata teach Dhamma to the nuns,
he teaches with care,
not without care;

if the Tathāgata teach Dhamma to laymen, disciples,
he teaches with care,
not without care;

if the Tathāgata teach Dhamma to lay-women, disciples,
he teaches with care,
not without care;

if the Tathāgata teach Dhamma to the many folk, be they but followers who go about with grain,[4]
he teaches with care,
not without care.

And why?

Filled with respect for Dhamma
is the Tathāgata, monks, filled with reverence for Dhamma.'

---

[1] Cf. A. ii, 33; v, 32; S. iii, 84.

[2] Yogga-patha.

[3] Cf. Sn. 546, 572; It. 123; S. i, 28.

[4] Annabhāranesādānaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
Kakudha vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter X: Kakudha

Sutta 100

Kakudha Suttaṃ

Kakudha

---

[95]

Thus have I heard:

Now the Exalted One was once staying near Kosambī, in Ghosita Park;
and at that time Kakudha,[1] a Koliyan[2] —
the venerable Mahā Moggallāna's servitor — had just died
and was reborn[3] in a mind-pictured body;[4]
and the form that he took
was such that it filled two or three Magadhan village fields;[5]
yet that form caused suffering
neither to him
nor to another.

▪

[96] And Kakudha deva visited the venerable Mahā Moggallāna,
saluted him
and stood at one side;
and so standing,
he spoke thus to the venerable one:

'Sir, in Devadatta has arisen this longing:[6]

"It is I who will lead the Order of monks!"

—and, sir, with the rising of that thought Devadatta's psychic power has declined.'[7]

Thus spoke the deva, Kakudha;
and having spoken so,
he saluted the venerable Mahā Moggallāna and,
keeping him on his right,
disappeared thence.

■

Then went the venerable Mahā Moggallāna to the Exalted One and,
saluting him,
sat down at one side.

And he told the Exalted One:[8]

At this time, Venerable Sir, Kakudha, a Koliyan my servitor —
has just died
and was reborn in a mind-pictured body;
and the form that he took
was such that it filled two or three Magadhan village fields
yet that form caused suffering
neither to him
nor to another.

And Kakudha deva visited me saluted me and stood at one side;
and so standing,
he spoke thus:

'Sir, in Devadatta has arisen this longing:

"It is I who will lead the Order of monks!"

—and, sir, with the rising of that thought Devadatta's psychic power has declined.'

Thus spoke the deva, Kakudha;
and having spoken so,
he saluted me and,
keeping me on his right,
disappeared thence.

Then I came to the Exalted One.

■

(And the Exalted One said:)

'What, Moggallāna,
have you with your mind
so compassed[9] the mind of Kakudha deva
as to know:

Whatsoever Kakudha deva says,
all that is just thus
and not otherwise?

'Lord, I have so compassed the mind of Kakudha deva
as to know:

Whatsoever Kakudha deva says,
all that is just thus
and not otherwise.'

'Then ward thou thy words, Moggallāna, ward thou thy words;
for even now the foolish fellow (Devadatta) will betray himself!

§

Moggallāna, there are these five teachers found in the world.

What five?

Take the case, Moggallāna,
of some teacher whose ways are impure,
but who thinks:

"I am pure,
pure are my ways,
clean and stainless" —

but his disciples know:

"This worthy teacher is impure in his ways,
but thinks:

'I am pure,
pure are my ways,
clean and stainless'

If we tell the householders,
he will not like it;
and how can we do what he will not like?

And he is honoured
by gifts of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments.

What the self shall do,
even by that
shall the self be known."[10]

Moggallana- [97], the disciples ward such a teacher in his ways;
and such a teacher
expects this warding of his ways of his disciples.

▪

Again, Moggallāna, some teacher's mode of livelihood is not pure,
but who thinks:

"I am pure,
pure is my mode of livelihood,
clean and stainless" —

but his disciples know:

"This worthy teacher is impure in his mode of livelihood,
but thinks:

'I am pure,
pure is my mode of livelihood,
clean and stainless'

If we tell the householders,
he will not like it;
and how can we do what he will not like?

And he is honoured
by gifts of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments.

What the self shall do,
even by that
shall the self be known."

Moggallāna, the disciples ward such a teacher in his mode of livelihood;
and such a teacher
expects this warding of his livelihood of his disciples.

▪

Again, Moggallāna, some teacher's Dhamma teaching is not pure,
but who thinks:

"I am pure,
pure is my Dhamma teaching,
clean and stainless" —

but his disciples know:

"This worthy teacher is impure in his Dhamma teaching,
but thinks:

'I am pure,
pure is my Dhamma teaching,
clean and stainless'

If we tell the householders,
he will not like it;
and how can we do what he will not like?

And he is honoured
by gifts of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments.

What the self shall do,
even by that
shall the self be known."

Moggallāna, the disciples ward such a teacher in his Dhamma teaching;
and such a teacher
expects this warding of his Dhamma teaching of his disciples.

▪

Again, Moggallāna, some teacher's exposition is not pure,
but who thinks:

"I am pure,
pure is my exposition,
clean and stainless" —

but his disciples know:

"This worthy teacher is impure in his exposition,
but thinks:

'I am pure,
pure is my exposition,
clean and stainless'

If we tell the householders,
he will not like it;
and how can we do what he will not like?

And he is honoured
by gifts of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments.

What the self shall do,
even by that
shall the self be known."

Moggallāna, the disciples ward such a teacher in his exposition;
and such a teacher
expects this warding of his exposition of his disciples.

▪

Again, Moggallāna, some teacher's knowledge and insight is not pure,
but who thinks:

"I am pure,
pure is my knowledge and insight,
clean and stainless" —

but his disciples know:

"This worthy teacher is impure in his knowledge and insight,
but thinks:

'I am pure,
pure is my knowledge and insight,
clean and stainless'

If we tell the householders,
he will not like it;
and how can we do what he will not like?

And he is honoured
by gifts of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments.

What the self shall do,
even by that
shall the self be known."

Moggallāna, the disciples ward such a teacher in his knowledge and insight;
and such a teacher
expects this warding of his knowledge and insight of his disciples.

These, Moggallāna, are five teachers found in the world!

§

But I, Moggallāna, am pure in my ways
and know that I am pure;

I know that my ways are pure,
clean and stainless:

My disciples ward not my ways,
nor do I expect this warding of my disciples.

▪

I am pure in my mode of livelihood,
and know that I am pure;

I know that my mode of livelihood is pure,
clean and stainless:

My disciples ward not my mode of livelihood,
nor do I expect this warding of my disciples.

▪

I am pure in my Dhamma teaching,
and know that I am pure;

I know that my Dhamma teaching is pure,
clean and stainless:

My disciples ward not my Dhamma teaching,
nor do I expect this warding of my disciples.

▪

I am pure in my exposition,
and know that I am pure;

I know that my exposition is pure,
clean and stainless:

My disciples ward not my exposition,
nor do I expect this warding of my disciples.

▪

I am pure in my knowledge and insight,
and know that I am pure;

I know that my exposition is pure,
clean and stainless:

My disciples ward not my exposition,
nor do I expect this warding of my disciples.

---

[1] At D. ii, 92 the B. tells of his faring-on, a Non-returner; at S. i, 54, as devaputta, he questions the B. as to whether he is glad or sad; the whole of our sutta recurs at Vin. ii, 185 (S.B.E. xx, 234 ff.); see also Rockhill's Life for the Tibetan version. There he is said to have been Kaundinya's son (Koṇḍañña), but Koṇḍañña seems to have been a Sākya; see Breath. 284; J. i, 56 (Warren, B. in T. 51, 69).

[2] For this clan see C.H.I. i, 177.

[3] Upapanna; at A. iv, 225 this word is used in contrast to paccājāta for beings reborn elsewhere than here.

[4] Manomayaṃ kāyaṃ. Cf. below, § 166; G.S. i, p. 17. Nyāṇatiloka: geisterzeugten.

[5] Comy. says this is tigāvuta, or about six miles!

[6] Our text and S.e. omit 'lābhasakkārasilokena abhibhūtassa pariyādinnacittasa' of the Vin. version.

[7] See Thomas' Life, 132 ff.

[8] The text repeats in full. [Ed. we have reconstructed the translation using Hare's vocabulary with alterations as appropriate.]

[9] Paricca (wholly gone round), as in the formula of 'thought-reading,' above, p. 12.

[10] yaṃ'tumo karissati, 'tumo'va tena paññāyissati. Comy. yaṃ esa karissati, so eva tena kammena pākaṭo bhavissati. 'By their fruits shall ye know them.' (Matt, vii 20).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 101

Sekha-Vesārajja Suttaṃ

The Fearful

---

[97]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things give confidence to a learner.

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk has faith,
is virtuous,
learned,
energetic
and has insight.'

§

Monks, what is fearful[1] to one of little faith, is not fearful to the believer;
wherefore this quality
gives confidence to a learner.

▪

Monks, what is fearful to the unvirtuous, is not fearful to the virtuous;
wherefore this quality
gives confidence to a learner.

▪

Monks, what is fearful to him of little learning, is not fearful to the learned;
wherefore this quality
gives confidence to a learner.

▪

Monks, what is fearful to the lazy, is not fearful to the energetic;
wherefore this quality
gives confidence to a learner.

▪

Monks, what is fearful to one who lacks insight, is not fearful to one with insight;
wherefore this quality
gives confidence to a learner.

Verily, monks, these five things give confidence to a learner.

[1] Sārajja. Comy. domanassa, Cf. Ephesians iii, 12: ' ... We have boldness and access with confidence by faith. ...'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 102

Saṅkita Suttaṃ

Suspected

---

[98]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a monk who follows after five things is mistrusted and suspected;
he is thought of as an evil monk,
yea, even though he has won to the immovable.[1]

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk haunts a harlot's house;[2]
a widow's house;
the house of some fat maid;[3]
where a eunuch lives;
or haunts the nuns' premises.

Verily, monks, a monk who follows after these five things
is mistrusted and suspected;
he is thought of as an evil monk,
yea, even though he has won to the immovable.'

---

[1] The text reads api kuppadhammo pi, v.l. ahuppa, and so S.e. and Comy. observing: even though he has destroyed the cankers he is suspected by others. On akuppa see above, § 95, Tr. Dict. s.v.

[2] This set recurs at Vin. i, 70; at Vibh. 246 (quoted at Vism. 17) and Expos, i, 201, quoting a ṭīkā, a sixth is given: a liquor shop. In the trsls. gocara is generally assumed to mean for alms; our Comy. glosses: tāsaṃ gehaṃ abhiṅha-gamano.Thiillahuman-. Comy. mahaūaka-, elsewhere translated 'old maid,' but see J. iv, 219.

[3] Thullakumārī-. Comy. mahallaka-, elsewhere translated 'old maid,' but see J. iv, 219.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 103

Mahā Cora Suttaṃ

The Robber

---

[98]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] a robber chief,
pursuing five courses,
breaks into houses,
makes off with plunder,
makes for lonely houses[2]
or lies in wait in the highway.

What five?

Herein, monks, a robber chief
relies on the roughness of the way,
the entanglements,
and the powerful,

he is a briber[3]
and works alone.

§

And how, monks, does the robber chief rely on the roughness of the way?

He relies on the rivers being unfordable and on the roughness of the mountains.

Thus, monks, a robber chief
relies on the roughness of the way.

▪

And how does he rely on the entanglements?

He relies [99] on the entanglement of the grass,
the trees,
the thickets[4]
and the great forest-wilderness.

Thus, monks, a robber chief relies on the entanglements.

▪

And how does he rely on the powerful?

He relies on rajahs and their ministers.

He thinks:

'If any question me,
these rajahs or their ministers
will tell a tale in my defence' —

and if any do question him,
they speak up for him.

Thus, monks, a robber chief
relies on the powerful.

▪

And how is he a briber?

He is rich with great wealth and property;
and he thinks:

'Should anyone question me,
I'll make him friendly from now on by a bribe' —

and if anyone does question him,
he acts in this way.

Thus, monks, a robber chief is a briber.

▪

And how, monks, does a robber chief work alone?

Herein, monks, a robber chief deals with his loot[5] alone.

Any why is that?

He thinks:

'Let none plan the hiding place with me[6]
and then embroil me!

Thus, monks, a robber chief works alone.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a robber chief breaks into houses,
makes off with plunder,
makes for lonely houses
or lies in wait in the highway.

Monks, in just the same way
an evil monk,
following five courses,
goes about to dig[7] a pit
to hurt himself;
and he is blamed
and censured by the wise
and begets demerit.

What five?

Herein, monks, the evil monk relies on roughness,
relies on entanglements,
relies on the powerful,
and he is a briber
and works alone.

§

And how, monks,
does the evil monk
rely on roughness?

He is possessed of roughness in body-working,
of roughness in word-working and of roughness in mind-working.

Thus, monks, the evil monk relies on roughness.

▪

[100] And how, monks, does he rely on entanglements?

He is one of wrong views and he follows the views of the extremist.[8]

Thus, monks, the evil monk relies on entanglements.

▪

And how, monks, does he rely on the powerful?

He relies on rajahs
or their ministers;
he thinks:

'If any question me,
these rajahs
or their ministers
will tell a tale in my defence' -
and if any do question him,
they speak up for him.

Thuss, monks, the evil monk relies on the powerful.

▪

And how, monks, is he a briber?

The evil monk is a receiver of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments;
and he thinks:

'Should anyone question me,
I will make him friendly from now on by a good turn' —
and if anyone does question him,
he acts in this way.

Thus, monks, the evil monk is a briber.

▪

And how, monks,
does the evil monk work alone?

Herein, monks, he has a house built for himself alone in the country outskirts, and from there visits the families and gets gain.

Thus, monks, the evil monk works alone.

Monks, following these five courses
an evil monk
goes about to dig a pit to hurt himself;

and he is blamed
and censured by the wise
and begets demerit.'

---

[1] Cf. A. i, 153 (G.S. I, 137) for the first three items of this sutta, Vin. ii, 89 for other five.

[2] Ekāgārikaṃ karoti. Comy. on A. i: rounding on a lonely house for plunder; ekāgārika has quite a different meaning at D. i, 166; see Dial. i, 229. The whole set is stock; Cf. D. i, 62; M. ii, 88; S. iii, 208.

[3] Bhogacāgī

[4] The text reads rodhaṃ, but S.e. with v.l. gedhaṃ; see G.S. i, 137 n.

[5] Niggahaṇāni. Comy. parasantakānaṃ bhaṇḍānaṃ gahaṇāni. I suppose the prefix here is ni; P.E.D. only gives the form with nis (nir).

[6] Guyhamantā. Comy. guhitabbamantā.

[7] Khataṃ upahataṃ attānaṃ pariharati. Comy. on A. i: guṇakhaṇanena khataṃ; Cf. Job vi, 27; Psalm lvii, 6; more literally, possessed of five conditions, be carries himself round, dug, hurt. Cf. below, p. 274 text.

[8] Antagāhika. Comy. Sasmtaṃ vā ucchedaṃ vā gahetvā ṭhūāya, taking up the position of either the eternalists or the annihilationists. See the Brakma-jala sutta (Dial. i).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 104

Samaṇa Sukhu-Māla Suttaṃ

He Who Graces

---

[100]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] endowed with five qualities
a monk is a recluse who graces recluses.[2]

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk is often asked to accept a robe,
not seldom;

—

often asked
to accept alms,
not seldom;

—

often asked
to accept lodging,
not seldom;

—

often asked
to accept medicaments,
not seldom.

▪

And with whomsoever he has fellowship in the godly life, often they act cordially toward him,
not [101] seldom;

—

often they speak cordially toward him,
not seldom;

—

often they think cordially of him,
not seldom;

—

cordially they offer service,
seldom without cordiality.

▪

And the pains that arise from bile,
or from phlegm,
or from wind,
or the union of humours,
or that come from seasonal changes,
or from improper care,
or from an attack (of some disease),
or that come as a result gf (former) deeds —
they press not sorely upon him;
he suffers little from ill-health.

▪

And he obtains at will,
without trouble,
without difficulty,
both here and now,
the abodes of ease:
the fourfold musings,
highly mental.[3]

▪

And by destroying the cankers,
he enters and abides in
the emancipation of the mind,
the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
realizing this state
by his own knowledge
even in this life.

Verily, monks,
endowed with these five qualities
a monk is a recluse who graces recluse.

§

Of him, monks, of whom
in speaking rightly
one may say:

'He is a recluse who graces recluses' —
verily of me, monks,
in speaking rightly
may one say that —
'He is a recluse who graces recluses'.

§

I, monks,
am often asked to accept a robe,
I am not seldom asked;

—

often asked
to accept alms,
I am not seldom asked;

—

often asked
to accept lodging,
I am not seldom asked;

—

often asked
to accept medicaments,
I am not seldom asked.

▪

With whomsoever I have fellowship in the godly life, unto me often they act cordially,
not seldom;

—

often they speak cordially toward me,
not seldom;

—

often they think cordially of me,
not seldom;

—

cordially they offer service,
seldom without cordiality.

▪

And the pains that arise from bile,
or from phlegm,
or from wind,
or the union of humours,
or that come from seasonal changes,
or from improper care,
or from an attack (of some disease),
or that come as a result gf (former) deeds —

they press not sorely upon me;
I suffer little from ill-health.

▪

And I obtain at will,
without trouble,
without difficulty,
both here and now,
the abodes of ease:
the fourfold musings,
highly mental.

▪

And having destroyed the cankers, I enter and abide in
the emancipation of the mind,
the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
realizing this state
by my own knowledge
even in this life.

§

Verily, monks, of him of whom in speaking rightly one may say;

'He is a recluse who graces recluses' —
even of me, monks,
in speaking rightly
one may say that -

'He is a recluse who graces recluses.'

---

[1] The whole of this sutta recurs as part of § 87 of the 'Fours,' A. ii, 87: see trsl. The third clause is stock; Cf. S. iv, 230; Mil. 302; as diseases in the lists at A. v, 110; Mil. 112; the fourth and fifth, above, §31.

[2] Samaṇesu samaṇa-sukhumālo.

[3] Abhicetāsikānaṃ. The rendering is quite literal. The mental residuum from fourfold jhāna was sati-cum-upekkhā, mental alertness and poise.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 105

Phāsu-Vihāra Suttaṃ

Comfort

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five comfortable abodes.[1]

What five?

Herein, monks, there is ever present in a monk amity in act of deed
when among his fellows in the godly life,
both in open and in secret;

▪

there is ever present in a monk amity in act of word

when among his fellows in the godly life,
both in open and in secret;

▪

there is ever present in a monk amity in act of mind
when among his fellows in the godly life,
both in open and in secret;

▪

and those virtues,
unbroken,
without a rent,
untarnished,
without blemish,
bringing freedom,
praised hy the wise,
incorrupt
and conducive to concentration —
in such he lives,
one in virtue,[2]
in open and in secret,
among his fellows in the godly life;

▪

and that view,
which is Ariyan,
saving,
and leads the doer thereof
to the utter destruction of Ill —
in that he lives,
one in view,

in open and in secret,
among his fellows in the godly life.

Verily, monks, these are the five comfortable abodes.'

---

[1] The whole sutta recurs at D. ii, 88; DA. ii, 531 has much more to say than Mnrp.; for the fourth clause see above, § 32, below V, § 179; for the fifth Cf. M. i, 69; D. i, 235. For a different set see above, § 94.

[2] Sīlasāmaññagato. Comy. samāna-sīlataṃ gato, ekasadisa-sīlo hutvā-ti attho.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 106

Ānanda Suttaṃ

The Venerable Ānanda

---

[102]

Thus have I heard:

'Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Kosambī in Ghosita Park;
and there the venerable Ānanda came to him,
saluted and sat down at one side.

So seated, the venerable Ānanda spoke thus to the Exalted One:

'Lord, to what extent
may the Order of monks,
as they live,
live comfortably?

'When, Ānanda, a monk has achieved virtue by self
and is no importuner[1] of another
as to more-virtue[2] —
to that extent, Ānanda,
may the Order,
as they live,
live comfortably.'

■

'But, lord, might there be another way
wherein the Order,
as they live,
may live comfortably?

'There might be, Ānanda,' said the Exalted One.

'When, Ānanda, a monk has achieved virtue by self
and is no importuner [103] of another
as to more-virtue,
considers self[3]
and does not consider another —
to that extent, Ānanda,
may the Order,
as they live,
live comfortably.'

▪

'Lord, might there be yet another way
wherein the Order,
as they live,
may live comfortably?

'There might be, Ānanda,' said the Exalted One.

'When, Ānanda, a monk has achieved virtue by self
and is no importuner of another
as to more-virtue,
and considering self
and does not consider another,
and a monk is neither famous
nor vexed by lack of fame —
to that extent, Ānanda,
may the Order,

as they live,
live comfortably.'

▪

'Lord, might there be yet another way
wherein the Order,
as they live,
may live comfortably?

'There might be, Ānanda,' said the Exalted One.

'When, Ānanda, a monk has achieved virtue by self
and is no importuner of another
as to more-virtue,
and considering self
and does not consider another,
and a monk is neither famous
nor vexed by lack of fame
and a monk obtains at will,
without trouble,
without difficulty,
both here and now,
the abodes of ease:
the fourfold musings,
highly mental —
to that extent, Ānanda,
may the Order,
as they live,
live comfortably.'

▪

'Lord, might there be yet another way
wherein the Order,
as they live,
may live comfortably?

'There might be, Ānanda,' said the Exalted One.

'When, Ānanda, a monk has achieved virtue by self
and is no importuner of another
as to more-virtue,
and considering self
and does not consider another,
and a monk is neither famous
nor vexed by lack of fame
and a monk obtains at will,
without trouble,
without difficulty,
both here and now,
the abodes of ease:
the fourfold musings,
highly mental
and enters and abides
in the emancipation of the mind,
in the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
realizing this state by his own knowledge
even in this life —
verily, Ānanda,
to that extent,
the Order of monks,
as they live,
may live comfortably.

And I declare, Ānanda, than this comfortable abode
there is none higher, none loftier.[4]

---

[1] Sam-pa-vattar. The Comy. observes; paraṃ sīlabhāve na garahati, na upavadati.

[2] Adhisīle.

[3] Attānupekkhī so also St. Paul to the Galatians (vi,l): '... if a man be overtaken in a fault ... restore (him) ... considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.'

[4] Uttaritaro vā paṇītataro vā; the latter is from pra √nī, and occurs everywhere in the Piṭakas.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 107

Sīla-Sampanna Suttaṃ

Virtue

---

[103]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's unsurpassed field for merit.

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk has achieved virtue,
concentration,
insight,
emancipation

and the knowledge and vision of emancipation.

[104] Verily, monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's unsurpassed field for merit.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 108

Asekha Suttaṃ

No Need to Train[1]

---

[104]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's unsurpassed field for merit.

Of what five?

Herein,[2] monks,
a monk is possessed of the whole body of virtue,
with no need to train;
a monk is possessed of the whole body of concentration,

with no need to train
a monk is possessed of the whole body of insight,
with no need to train
a monk is possessed of the whole body of emancipation,
with no need to train
a monk is possessed of the whole body of the knowledge and vision of emancipation,
with no need to train.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's unsurpassed field for merit.'

---

[1] Asekhiyā.

[2] This recurs at D. iii, 279; S. i, 99 (cf. v, 162); A. i, 162 (G.S. i, 144); v, 16; below p. 271 of text; for 3 see It. 51. In this and following sutta Nyāṇatiloka suppresses several terms.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 109

Cātud-Disa Suttaṃ

The Four-Regioner

---

[104]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things a monk is a four-regioner.[1]

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk is virtuous,
abides restrained by the restraint of the Obligations,[2]
is perfected in conduct and habit,
sees peril in the smallest fault,
accepts the training
and trains himself accordantly;

■

and he is learned,
with a retentive and well-stored mind,
and those things
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
setting forth in spirit and letter
the godly life,
perfect in its entirety,
are learnt [105] by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory;[3]

▪

and he well contented[4]
with any requisite:
robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments;

▪

and he obtains at will,
without trouble,
without difficulty,
both here and now,
the abodes of ease:
the fourfold musings,
highly mental;

▪

and enters and abides
in the emancipation of the mind,
in the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
realizing this state by his own knowledge
even in this life.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five things a monk is a four-regioner.'

---

[1] Cātuddiso. Comy. catusu disāsu appaṭihatacāro, moving without let in the four quarters — and adds that a khīnāsava is spoken Cf. The word as a technical term does not seem to recur elsewhere in the four Nikāyas. It occurs at Sn. 42:

Cātuddiso appaṭigho ca hoti santussamāno itarītarena, the second line conveying the idea of the third clause in our sutta. (Cf. our Comy. with J. i, 7, last line of page.) At D. i, 145: cātud-disaṃ saṃghaṃ uddisa vihāraṃ karotī; Dial.: the putting up of a dwelling-place for the Order in all four directions.

[2] Pāṭimokkha.

[3] For those first two Cf. above, § 87.

[4] Cf. M. ii, 6; S. ii, 194; A. iv, 233; v, 25; below V, § 127.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
11. Phāsu-Vihāra Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XI: The Abodes of Comfort

Sutta 110

Araññа Suttaṃ

The Forest

---

[105]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things
a monk is fit to follow the ways of the forest-wildernesses,
the outland bed and seat'[1]

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk is virtuous,
abides restrained by the restraint of the Obligations,
is perfected in conduct and habit,
sees peril in the smallest fault,
accepts the training
and trains himself accordantly;

▪

and he is learned,
with a retentive and well-stored mind,
and those things
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
setting forth in spirit and letter
the godly life,
perfect in its entirety,
are learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory;

▪

herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple,
abiding in active energy,
puts away all wrong things
and takes to right things;
steadfast and strenuous,
he shirks not the burden of righteousness;[2]

▪

and he obtains at will,
without trouble,
without difficulty,
both here and now,
the abodes of ease:
the fourfold musings,
highly mental;

■

and enters and abides
in the emancipation of the mind,
in the emancipation of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
realizing this state by his own knowledge
even in this life.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is fit to follow the ways of the wildernesses, the outland bed and seat.'

---

[1] See Breath. p. xl. Comy. says a khīṇāsava is referred to.

[2] The text does net give in full; see above, § 2. Nyāṇatiloka renders besitzt Willenskraft, which gives India a term she did not possess, though Gotama used his best substitutes. Viriya, 'effort,' 'energy,' is a mode of using will.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 111

Kulupaga Suttaṃ

The Clan-Goer

---

[105]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a clan-going monk becomes among clan folk neither dear
nor loved
nor revered
nor what he ought to become.

What five?

He is intimate with those who are unfamiliar;[1] interfering without warrant;[2] frequents the society of[3] dissenters;

whispers[4] in the ear;
and asks too much.

[106] Monks. pursuing these five courses
a clan-going monk becomes among clan folk neither dear
nor loved
nor revered
nor what he ought to become.

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a clan-going monk becomes among clan folk dear
loved
revered
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He is not intimate with those who are unfamiliar;
not interfering without warrant;
does not frequent the society of dissenters;
does not whisper in the ear;
and does not ask too much.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a clan-going monk becomes among clan folk
dear
loved
revered
and what he ought to become.

---

[1] Comy. those who do not make friends with him.

[2] Comy. being no lord, he apportions as a lord, saying, Give this, take that. P.E.D. intentioning unruliness (?).

[3] Vyatta.

[4] Cf. Romans i, 29, also Proverbs xvi, 28.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 112

Pacchā-Samaṇa Suttaṃ

The Recluse Who Walks Behind

---

[106]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, acting in five ways
a recluse[1] ought not to be taken to walk behind.

What five?

He keeps too far behind
or too near;
takes not the alms-laden bowl;[2] restrains not one's speech
from being overtaken in a fault;
interrupts one,
time and again,

in speaking;
and is dull-witted,
stupid,
an idiot.

Monks, acting in these five ways
a recluse ought not to be taken
to walk behind.'

§

"Monks, acting in five ways
a recluse should be taken
to walk behind.

What five?

He does not keep too far behind
or too near;
takes the alms-laden bowl;
restrains one's speech
from being overtaken in a fault;
does not interrupt one,
time and again,
in speaking;
and is insightful,[ed1]
not stupid,
not an idiot.

Monks, acting in these five ways
a recluse should be taken
to walk behind.'

---

[1] A junior; for the first four clauses see Vin. i, 46 (in different order); for the fourth Cf. below VI, § 60; Sn. p. 107; M. ii, 122.

[2] Patta-pariyāpanna.

[ed1] Hare has abridged the entire second section of this sutta. This term, in the Pali is 'paññavā' not 'na duppañño'. Hare usually translates 'paññā' as 'insight' hence 'insightful.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 113

Sammā-Samādhi Suttaṃ

Concentration

---

[106]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities
a monk cannot enter and abide
in right concentration.

What five?

Herein, monks,
a monk cannot endure[1] sights,
cannot endure sounds,
cannot endure smells,
cannot endure tastes
cannot endure and touches.

Monks, possessed of these five qualities
a monk cannot enter and abide
in right concentration.'

§

"Monks, possessed of five qualities
a monk can enter and abide
in right concentration.

What five?

Herein, monks,
a monk can endure sights,
can endure sounds,
can endure smells,
can endure tastes
can endure and touches.

Monks, possessed of these five qualities
a monk cannot enter and abide
in right concentration.'

---

[1] Cf. above, § 86, below V, § 138.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 114

Andhakavinda Suttaṃ

At Andhakavinda

---

[106]

Thus have I heard:

On one occasion,
when the Exalted One was dwelling among the Magadhese at Andhakavinda,[1]
the venerable Ānanda came to him,
saluted and sat down at one side.

And the Exalted One spoke thus to the venerable Ānanda,
so seated:

[107] 'Ānanda, the monks that are novices,
lately gone forth,
come newly to this Dhamma[2] and discipline —
those monks, Ānanda, verily[3] must be made to take heed of,
enter into
and stand fast in five things.

What five?

Say thus:

"Come you, sirs,
be virtuous;
live restrained in the restraint of the Obligations,[4]
perfected in conduct and habit;
see danger in the smallest fault;
and, in your endeavour,
train in the steps of the training!"

Thus must they be made to take heed of,
enter into,
and stand fast in
the restraint of the Obligations.

▪

And say thus:

"Come you, sirs,
live with the sense-doors guarded, awake to the watch,[5]
be wise in wakefulness,[6] with the ways of the mind[7] well watched, possessed of a heart that is awake and on watch!"

Thus must they be made to take heed of,
enter into,
and stand fast in
the restraint of the senses.

▪

And say thus:

"Come you, sirs,
be little in talk,
make a limit to talk!"

Thus must they be made to take heed of,
enter into,
and stand fast in
the limiting of talk.

▪

And say thus:

"Come you, sirs,
be forest-dwellers,
seek ye the ways of the forest-wilderness,
the outland bed and seat!"

Thus must they be made to take heed of,
enter into,
and stand fast in
seclusion as to the body.

▪

And say thus:

"Come you, sirs,
be right in view,[8]
seeing right!"

Thus must they be made to take heed of,
enter into,
and stand fast in seeing right."

Ānanda, the novices,
lately gone forth,
come newly to this Dhamma and discipline,
must be made to take heed of,
enter into,
and stand fast
in these five things.'

---

[1] Our Comy. is silent; S.A. i, 220, a village. It presumably lay between Benares and Rājagaha; see Vin. i, 109, 220 and 224.

[2] This is stock; see Vin. i, 40; M. i, 457; S. 1, 9.

[3] Vo.

[4] Pātimokkha.

[5] Ārakkhasatino. Comy. dvāra-rakkhikāya satiyā samannāgatā.

[6] Nipakasatino (text nipakka). Comy. dvāra-rakkhanakena va ñāṇena samannāgata-satino.

[7] Sārakkhitamānasā; Cf. Sn. 63; SnA. 116; Thag. 729.

[8] Our text and S.e. read sammā-diṭṭhikā, but Comy. -diṭṭhino.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 115

Macchari Suttaṃ

Begrudging[1]

---

[108]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.[2]

What five?

She begrudges sharing her lodging,
she begrudges sharing a family's services,
she begrudges sharing the gain of a family's services,
she begrudges sharing fame,
she begrudges sharing Dhamma.[3]

Monks, pursuing these five courses a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.

§

Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

What five?

She does not begrudge sharing her lodging,
she does not begrudge sharing a family's services,
she does not begrudge sharing the gain of a family's services,
she does not begrudge sharing fame,
she does not begrudge sharing Dhamma.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

---

[1] Maccharī; for this sutta Cf. D. iii, 234; A. iv, 459; DhS. trsl. 299; Vism. 683; Expos. ii, 480.

[2] Cf. above, § 4.

[3] Comy. pariyattidhammaṃ, the dhamma of the texts. Nyātiloka here leaves 'law' (Gesetz) and has 'spiritual things.' That the opposites are also set forth he entirely omits!

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 116

Vaṇṇa Suttaṃ

Praise[1]

---

[108]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.

What five?

Without[2] testing or plumbing[3] the matter,
she speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;
without testing or plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;
without testing or plumbing the matter,
she shows her faith in things unbelievable;
without testing or plumbing the matter,

she shows her disbelief in things believable;
and she rejects[4] the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.'

§

Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

What five?

After[ed1] testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in praise of the praiseworthy,
after testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;
after testing and plumbing the matter,
she shows her faith in things believable,
after testing and plumbing the matter,
she shows her disbelief in things unbelievable;
and she accepts the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

---

[1] Vaṇṇanā.

[2] Cf. below V, § 236; A. ii, 84; Pug. 49.

[3] Apariyogāhetvā.

[4] Vinipāteti. Comy. she gives it to another. Cf. below V, § 235.

[ed1] Hare abridges this entire half of the sutta with 'Pursuing the opposite she goes to heaven.' As it does not readily adapt itself in English to precise opposites there are some slight deviations in my reconstruction.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 117

Issuki Suttaṃ

Jealousy

---

[108]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.

What five?

Without testing or plumbing the matter,[ed1]
she speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;
without testing or plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;
she is jealous;
she is mean;
and she rejects the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.'

§

Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

What five?

After testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in praise of the praiseworthy,
after testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;
she is not jealous;
she is not mean;
and she accepts the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

---

ed1 Hare abridges this entire sutta with '...she is jealous, mean, and rejects the gift of faith' I have reconstructed the sutta using the previous sutta and the Pali.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 118

Micchā-Diṭṭhika Suttaṃ

Views

---

[108]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.

What five?

Without testing or plumbing the matter,[ed1]
she speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;
without testing or plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;
she is wrong in views;
she is wrong in purpose;
and she rejects the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.'

§

Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

What five?

After testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in praise of the praiseworthy,
after testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;
she has right views;
she is right in purpose;
and she accepts the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

---

ed1 Hare abridges this entire sutta with '...she is wrong in views, wrong in purpose, and rejects the gift of faith.' I have reconstructed the sutta using the AN 5.116 and the Pali.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 119

Micchā-Vācā Suttaṃ

Speech

---

[109]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.

What five?

Without testing or plumbing the matter,[ed1]
she speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;
without testing or plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;
she is wrong in speech;
she is wrong in action;
and she rejects the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.'

§

Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

What five?

After testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in praise of the praiseworthy,
after testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;
she has right speech;
she is right in action;
and she accepts the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

---

ed1 Hare abridges this entire sutta with '...she is wrong in speech, wrong in actions, and rejects the gift of faith.' I have reconstructed the sutta using AN 5.116 and the Pali.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
12. Andhakavinda Vagga

The book of the Fives

Chapter XII: Andhakavinda

Sutta 120

Micchā-Vāyāma Suttaṃ

Effort

---

[109]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.

What five?

Without testing or plumbing the matter,
she speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;
without testing or plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;
she is wrong in effort;
she is wrong in mindfulness;
and she rejects the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely cast into hell as a reward.'

§

Monks, pursuing five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

What five?

After testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in praise of the praiseworthy,
after testing and plumbing the matter,
she speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;
she has right effort;
she is right in mindfulness;
and she accepts the gift of faith.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a nun is surely set in heaven as a reward.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 121

Gilāna Suttaṃ

A Sick Man

---

[109]

Thus have I heard:

On one occasion, when he was staying near Veaālī, at the Gabled Hall in Mahāvana, the Exalted One, arising from seclusion at eventide, visited the hall of the sick.[1]

And the Exalted One saw a monk, weak and ailing;
and at the sight he sat down on the seat made ready.

And when he was seated, the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, if five things forsake not anyone weak and ailing,
for him this may be expected:

Ere long,
by destroying the cankers,
he will enter and abide in
the emancipation of mind,
the emancipation of insight,
which is free of cankers,
realizing this by his own knowledge
even both here and now.

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk abides seeing nothing attractive in the body;
is conscious of the cloying of food;
conscious of distaste as to the world;
perceives impermanence in the compounded;
and his inner self is well set on the thought of death.[2]

Monks, if these five things forsake not anyone weak and ailing,
for him this may be expected:

Ere long,
by destroying the cankers,
he will enter and abide in
the emancipation of mind,
the emancipation of insight,
which is free of cankers,
realizing this by his own knowledge
even both here and now.

---

[1] Gilāna-sālā; Cf. S. iv, 210 for the same setting.

[2] Cf. above, § 71.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 122

Sati-Sūpaṭṭhita Suttaṃ

The Arising of Mindfulness

---

[110]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, whatsoever monk or nun
make become five things,
make an increase in five things,
unto such
one of two fruits may be expected:
either gnosis here and now or,
if he have some substrate left,
the state of a Non-returner.[1]

What five?

Herin, monks, mindfulness as to insight into the way of the rise and fall of things is well established within a monk;
he abides seeing nothing attractive in the body;
is conscious of the cloying of food;
conscious of there being no real joy in the world;
and perceives impermanence in the compounded.

Monks, whatsoever monk or nun
make become these five things, make an increase in these five things,
unto such
one of two fruits may be expected:
either gnosis here and now or,
if he have some substrate left,
the state of a Non-returner.'

---

[1] Cf. above, § 67.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 123

Dūpaṭṭhāka-Gilāna Suttaṃ

On Helping[1] (a)

---

[110]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessing five qualities
a sick man is an ill help to himself.

What five?

He treats not himself with physic;[2]

knows no measure[3] in his treatment;

applies not medicaments;

sets not out the extent of his illness
to one who tends him in goodness of heart,
saying:

"In going
it goes thus,
when it returns
it comes so,
while it is with me
it is just thus";

nor is he the kind of man
who endures the onset of bodily aches and pains, racking,
shooting,
stabbing,
bitter,
galling,
life-taking.[4]

Monks, possessing these five qualities a sick man is an ill help to himself.'

§

"Monks, possessing five qualities
a sick man is a help to himself.

What five?

He treats himself with physic;

knows measure in his treatment;

applies medicaments;

sets out the extent of his illness
to one who tends him in goodness of heart,
saying:

"In going
it goes thus,
when it returns
it comes so,
while it is with me
it is just thus";

and he is the kind of man
who endures the onset of bodily aches and pains,
racking,
shooting,
stabbing,
bitter,
galling,
life-taking.

Monks, possessing these five qualities
a sick man is a help to himself.'

---

[1] Uddānaṃ has dve paṭṭhānā; these two suttas recur at Vin. i, 302-3, but the 'five' are called aṅgā, for our dhammā.

[2] Sappāya, what makes for good; Cf. Mil. 215, trsl. tonic; P.E.D. drug (? simple).

[3] Sappāya mattaṃ; Cf. D. i, 205, where Ānanda cannot pay a visit owing to bhesajja-mattā pītā.

[4] Cf. below V, § 140 and references there.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 124

Gilānūpaṭṭhāka Suttaṃ

On Helping (b)

---

[110]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessing five qualities
one who waits on the sick
is not fit to help the sick.

What five?

[111] He cannot prepare medicaments;

does not know physic from what is not physic, offers what is not,
does not offer what is;

in hope of gain[1] waits on the sick, not from good-will;

loathes to move excrement,
urine,
puke
and spittle;

nor can he
from time to time instruct,
rouse,
gladden
and satisfy the sick
with Dhamma-talk.

Monks, possessing these five qualities
one who waits on the sick
is not fit to help the sick.'

§

"Monks, possessing five qualities
one who waits on the sick
is fit to help the sick.

What five?

He can prepare medicaments;

knows physic from what is not physic, offers what is,
does not offer what is not;

not in hope of gain waits on the sick,
but from good-will;

does not loathe to move excrement,
urine,
puke
and spittle;

he can
from time to time instruct,
rouse,
gladden
and satisfy the sick
with Dhamma-talk.

Monks, possessing these five qualities
one who waits on the sick
is fit to help the sick.'

---

[1] Comy. 'expecting (gifts) of robes, ete.' (forgetting the helper might well be a lay-disciple, e.g. Suppiyā, A. i, 26).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 125

Paṭhama Āyussa Suttaṃ

Health Shall Spring Forth (a)

---

[111]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, not from these five things shall health[1] spring forth.

What five?

He treats not himself with physic;

metes out physic without intelligence;

eats unripe things;

goes about at unseemly times;

and walks not the godly[2] way.

Verily, monks, not from these five shall health spring forth.'

§

"Monks, from these five things
shall health spring forth.

What five?

He treats himself with physic;

metes out physic with intelligence;

does not eat unripe things;

does not go about at unseemly times;

and he walks the godly way.

Verily, monks, from these five shall health spring forth.'

---

[1] Āyussa, leading to health or vitality, life; Comy. āyuvaḍhana.

[2] A-brahma-cārī, not a god-way-er.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 126

Dutiya Āyussa Suttaṃ

Health Shall Spring Forth (b)

---

[111]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, not from these five things
shall health spring forth.

What five?

He treats not himself with physic;

metes out physic without intelligence;

eats unripe things;

is without virtue;

and is a bad friend.

Verily, monks, not from these five shall health spring forth.'

§

"Monks, from these five things
shall health spring forth.

What five?

He treats himself with physic;

metes out physic with intelligence;

does not eat unripe things;

he is virtuous;

and he is a good friend.

Verily, monks, from these five shall health spring forth.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XIII. Gilāna Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII The Sick

Sutta 127

On Withdrawing[1]

---

[111]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a monk is not fit to draw apart from the Order.

What five?

[112] Herein, monks, a monk is not content with any robe,
with any alms,
with any lodging,
or with any medicament,
and he dwells full of lustful purpose.[2]

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a monk is not fit to draw apart from the Order.'

§

"Monks, pursuing five courses
a monk is fit to draw apart from the Order.

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk is content with any robe,
with any alms,
with any lodging,
or with any medicament,
and he does not dwell full of lustful purpose.

Monks, pursuing these five courses
a monk is fit to draw apart from the Order.'

---

[1] Avappakāsa, from the root √kṛṣ, a derivative of which means to plough. See Brethr. p. xxxix.

[2] Kāma-saṅkappa; the opposite here, as at D. iii, 215 (see trsl. n.), is nekkhamma-sankappa, renunciation-purpose.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 128

Samaṇa-Dukkha-Sukha Suttaṃ

The Ills of a Recluse

---

[112]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these are the five ills of a recluse.

What five?

Herein, monks, he is not content with any robe
he is not content with any alms, he is not content with any lodging,
he is not content with any medicament,
and he finds no delight in leading the godly life.

Verily, monks, these are the five.

§

Monks, these are the five comforts of a recluse.[1]

What five?

Herein, monks, he is content with any robe
he is content with any alms, he is content with any lodging,
he is content with any medicament,
and he finds delight in leading the godly life.

---

[1] Sukhāni

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 129

Parikuppa Suttaṃ

Festering[1]

---

[112]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, five are the lost in hell who lie festering,
incurable.

What five?

(By him) has his mother been deprived of life;
his father been deprived of life;
an arahant been deprived of life;
(by him), with evil thought,
has the Tathāgata's blood been drawn;
(by him) has the Order been embroiled.[2]

Verily, monks, these are the five lost in hell
who lie festering,
incurable.'

---

[1] Parikuppo. Comy. observes: kuppana-sabhāvā, as an old wound. Kuppati means to shake, to be agitated, to be angry (so in the English idiom).

[2] Cf. below VI, § 87; Mil. 214.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
13. Gilāna Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIII: The Sick

Sutta 130

Sampadā Suttaṃ

Profit[1]

---

[112]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five losses.

What five?

Loss of kin,
loss of wealth,
loss by disease,
loss of virtue
and loss of (right) view.

■

Monks, not caused by loss of kin, or loss of wealth,
or by disease
do beings,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
arise in the wayward way,[2]
the ill way,
the [113] abyss,
hell.

▪

Monks, caused by loss of virtue or by loss of view
do beings,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
arise in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Verily, monks, these are the five.

§

Monks, there are these five profits.

What five?

Profit of kin,
profit of wealth,
profit of health,

profit of virtue
and profit of (right) view.

■

Monks, not caused by profit of kin, or profit of wealth
or profit of health
do beings,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
arise in the happy way,
the heaven world.

■

Monks, caused by profit of virtue or by profit of view
do beings,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
arise in the happy way,
the heaven world.

Verily, monks, these are the five.'

---

[1] Sampadā; Cf. above, § 91. This sutta recurs at D. iii, 235.

[2] Apāya.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 131

Paṭhama Cakkānuvattana Suttaṃ

The Onward Roll of the Wheel (a)

---

[113]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, endowed in five ways
a rajah, rolling the wheel (of state), rolls on the wheel[1] by Dhamma;[2]
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by the hand of any hostile son of man.

In what five ways?

Herein, monks, the rajah,
rolling the wheel of state,
knows good;[3]
knows Dhamma;

knows measure;[4]
knows times;[5]
and knows assembled[6] men.

Monks, endowed in these five ways
a rajah, rolling the wheel of state,
rolls on the wheel by Dhamma;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by the hand of any hostile son of man.

§

Even so, monks, endowed in five ways,
the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
rolls on by Dhamma
the unsurpassed Dhamma wheel;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by recluse,
godly man,
deva,
Māra,
Brahmā,
or by any in the world.

In what five ways?

[114] Herein, monks, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
knows good;[7]

knows Dhamma;[8]
knows measure;
knows times;[9]
and knows assembled men.

Verily, monks, endowed in these five ways
the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
rolls on by Dhamma
the unsurpassed wheel[10] of Dhamma;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by recluse,
godly man,
deva,
Māra,
Brahmā,
or by any in the world.'

---

[1] Comy. āṇā-cakka the order-wheel.

[2] Comy. dasa-kusala-dhammena.

[3] Attha, but Comy. hetu.

[4] Comy. in punishments and impositions; Cf. Jer. xxx, 11: 'I will correct thee in measure.'

[5] Comy. times for pleasure, court-work and touring the country.

[6] Comy. whether they be nobles, brahmans, etc.

[7] Comy. pañca atthe jānāti.

[8] Comy. the four.

[9] Comy. for going apart, attainment (in musing), teaching and touring.

[10] Comy. seṭṭha-cakka, the best wheel.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 132

Dutiya Cakkānuvattana Suttaṃ

The Onward Roll of the Wheel (b)

---

[114]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, endowed in five ways
the eldest son of a rajah,
who rolls the wheel (of state),
keeps[1] rolling on by Dhamma
the wheel his father set a-roll;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by the hand of any hostile creature.

In what five ways?

Herein, monks, the eldest son of a rajah,[2]
rolling the wheel of state,

knows good;
knows Dhamma;
knows measure;
knows times;
and knows assembled men.

Monks, endowed in these five ways
the eldest son of a rajah,
who rolls the wheel (of state),
keeps rolling on by Dhamma
the wheel his father set a-roll;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by the hand of any hostile creature.

§

Even so, monks, endowed in five ways Sāriputta keeps rolling on,
just in the right way,[3]
the unsurpassed wheel of Dhamma
the Tathāgata set a-roll;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by recluse,
godly man,
deva,
Māra,
Brahmā,
or by any in the world.

In what five ways?

Herein, monks, Sāriputta
knows good;

knows Dhamma;
knows measure;
knows times;
and knows assembled men.

Verily, monks, endowed in these five ways Sāriputta keeps rolling on,
just in the right way,
the unsurpassed wheel of Dhamma
the Tathāgata set a-roll;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by recluse,
godly man,
deva,
Māra,
Brahmā,
or by any in the world.'

---

[1] Anupamtteti, in distinction from pavatteti previously.

[2] The text repeats in full. Cf. Sn. 557; Thag. 827.

[3] Samma-d-eva.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 133

Dhamma-Rāja Suttaṃ

The Onward Roll of the Wheel (c)[1]

---

[114]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, the rajah who rolls the wheel (of state),
a Dhamma man,
a Dhamma rajah,
rolls on indeed
no[2] unroyal wheel.'

§

[115] And when he had thus spoken,
a certain monk said to the Exalted One;

'But who, lord,
is the rajah of the rajah,
the roller of the wheel,
the Dhamma man,
the Dhamma rajah?

▪

'It is Dhamma, monk!'
said the Exalted One.

§

'Herein, monk, the rajah,
the wheel roller,
the Dhamma man,
the Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,
with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
he sets a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward
for folk within his realm.

▪

Herein, monk, the rajah,
the wheel roller,
the Dhamma man,
the Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,
with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
he sets a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward
for warrior and camp follower,
for brāhman and for householder,
for town and country folk,
for recluse and for godly man,
for beast and bird alike.

▪

Thus indeed, monk, that rajah,
the wheel roller,
the Dhamma man,
the Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,
with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
setting a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward

for warrior and camp follower,
for brāhman and for householder,
for town and country folk,
for recluse and for godly man,
for beast and bird alike,
rolls on the wheel by Dhamma;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by the hand of any hostile creature.

§

Even so, monk, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
a Dhamma man,
a Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,
with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
he sets a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward
for monks, saying:

"Follow ye such a practice in deed,
not that other;
follow ye such a practice in word,
not that other;

follow ye such a practice in thought,
not that other;
follow ye such a livelihood,
not that other;
seek ye such a town or village,
not that other."

▪

Even so, monk, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
a Dhamma man,
a Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,
with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
he sets a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward
for nuns, saying:

"Follow ye such a practice in deed,
not that other;
follow ye such a practice in word,
not that other;
follow ye such a practice in thought,
not that other;
follow ye such a livelihood,
not that other;
seek ye such a town or village,
not that other."

▪

Even so, monk, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
a Dhamma man,
a Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,
with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
he sets a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward
for men lay disciples, saying:

"Follow ye such a practice in deed,
not that other;
follow ye such a practice in word,
not that other;
follow ye such a practice in thought,
not that other;
follow ye such a livelihood,
not that other;
seek ye such a town or village,
not that other."

▪

Even so, monk, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
a Dhamma man,

a Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,
with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
he sets a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward
for women lay disciples, saying:

"Follow ye such a practice in deed,
not that other;
follow ye such a practice in word,
not that other;
follow ye such a practice in thought,
not that other;
follow ye such a livelihood,
not that other;
seek ye such a town or village,
not that other."

▪

Thus indeed, monk, that Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
a Dhamma man,
a Dhamma rajah,
relies just on Dhamma,
honours Dhamma,
reveres Dhamma,
esteems Dhamma;
with Dhamma as his standard,

with Dhamma as his banner,
with Dhamma as his mandate,
setting a Dhamma watch
and bar
and ward
for monk and nun,
for lay-disciple, both man and woman,
rolls on by Dhamma
the unsurpassed wheel of Dhamma;
and that wheel may not be rolled back
by recluse,
godly man,
deva,
Māra,
Brahmā,
or by any in the world.'

---

[1] This sutta for the Threes recurs at A. i, 109 (G.S. i, 94); it is fully commented on at AA. ii, 178, to which our comment refers.

[2] A. i. reads so pi nāma arājakaṃ, but S.e. both there and here, with Comy. and our text, so pi na ..., which I follow.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 134

Khatatiya-Rāja Suttaṃ

In Every Quarter[1]

---

[116]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if he have five[2] qualities,
a warrior rajah,
anointed of head,
in whatsoever quarter he abide,
abides where he himself has conquered.

What five?

Herein, monks, the anointed warrior rajah
is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations

both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach
in point of birth;[3]

▪

he is rich with great wealth and resources and his treasuries and granaries overflow;[4]

▪

and his strength is in the four[5] divisions of his army, loyal and alert to commands;

▪

his minister is wise, intelligent,
discreet,
able to judge rightly
the future from past happenings;[6]

▪

and these four things ripen to his glory;

and with this fifth quality of glory,
wheresoever he abide,
he abides where he himself has conquered.

And how is that?

Verily, monks, it is just thus for conquerors of the conquered.[7]

§

Even so, monks, if he have five qualities, a monk,
in whatsoever quarter he abide,
abides released in heart.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk is virtuous,
lives restrained in the restraint of the Obligations,
perfected in conduct and habit,
seeing danger in the smallest fault,
in his endeavour,
training himself in the steps of the training, —
this is like the anointed warrior rajah's perfect birth.

▪

He has heard much,
bears in mind things heard,
as it were lays up in store things heard;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are heard much by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in mind,
fully understood [117] in theory, —
this is like the rajah's riches and overflowing treasuries and granaries.

▪

He abides in active energy,
putting away all unright things,
taking to right things,
steadfast and strenuous,
shirking not the burden of right, —
this is like the rajah's strength.

▪

He has insight,
being endowed with insight into the way
of the rise and fall of things,
with Ariyan penetration
into the way to the complete destruction of Ill, — this is like the rajah's possession of a minister.

▪

And these four things ripen to his release;
and with this fifth quality that is release,
wheresoever he abide,
he abides released in mind.

And how is that?

Verily, monks, it is just thus for those whose minds are released.'[8]

---

[1] The uddana reads rājā yassaṃ disaṃ, so also S.e.

[2] Cf. D. i, 137 for eight qualities; Mp. 639 ff. nearly equals DA. i, 281.

[3] A. i, 163; D. i, 113; Sn. p. 115; J. i, 2; below V, § 192.

[4] Cf. D. i, 134; Vin. i, 342.

[5] Elephants, chariots, cavalry and foot soldiers.

[6] At D. i, 137 this is a quality of the rajah; see Dial. i, 178 n.

[7] Vijitāvīnaṃ. Comy. vijita-vijayānaṃ, mahantena vijayena samannāgatānaṃ.

[8] Vimutta-cittānaṃ. Comy. pañcāhi vimuttīhi vimutta-mānāsānaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 135

Paṭhama Patthanā Suttaṃ

The Aim (a)[1]

---

[117]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if he have five things,[2]
an anointed warrior rajah's eldest son makes rule his aim.

What five?

Herein, monks, the anointed warrior rajah
is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations
both of mother and father,
unchallenged

and without reproach
in point of birth;

▪

is handsome,
comely,
amiable,
he has a wondrous lotus-like beauty;[3]

▪

is dear and lovely is he to his parents;

▪

dear and lovely to town and country folk;

▪

and in matters of skill that belong to anointed warrior rajahs:
elephant,
horse,
chariot,
bow
and sword skill,[4]
he is fully[5] trained.

§

And it occurs to him:

"I am well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach
in point of birth.

Wherefore should I not make rule my aim?

▪

I am handsome,
comely,
amiable,
and have a wondrous lotus-like beauty.

Wherefore should I not make rule my aim?

▪

I am dear and lovely is he to my parents.

Wherefore should I not make rule my aim?

▪

I am dear and lovely to town and country folk.

Wherefore should I not make rule my aim?

▪

In matters of skill that belong to anointed warrior rajahs:
elephant,
horse,
chariot,

bow
and sword skill, I am fully trained.

Wherefore should I not make rule my aim?"

Monks, if he have these five things,
the warrior rajah's eldest son
makes rule his aim.

§

Even so, monks,
if he have five things,[6]
a monk makes the destroying of the cankers
his aim.

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk has faith,
he believes in the enlightenment of the Tathāgata:

"Of a truth he is the Exalted One,
[118] arahant,
fully enlightened,
abounding in wisdom and right,
the well-gone,
the world-knower,
the incomparable tamer of tamable men,
the teacher of devas and men,
the Buddha, the Exalted One."

▪

he has health and well-being,
a good digestion,
which is neither over-cold
nor overheated,
but even
and suitable for striving;

▪

he is not deceitful
nor a make-believe,
but declares himself to the Master
or to his wise fellows in the godly life
just as he really is;

▪

he abides in active energy
to give up evil things,
and to hold to good things;
staunch and strong in effort,
he shirks not the burden of righteousness;

▪

he has insight
and is endowed therewith
into the way of the rise and fall of things,
with Ariyan penetration into the utter destruction öf Ill.

§

And it occurs to him:

"I have faith,
and believe in the enlightenment of the Tathāgata:
'Of a truth he is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
abounding in wisdom and right,
the well-gone,
the world-knower,
the incomparable tamer of tamable men,
the teacher of devas and men,
the Buddha, the Exalted One.'

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I have health and well-being,
a good digestion,
which is neither over-cold
nor overheated,
but even
and suitable for striving.

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I am not deceitful
nor a make-believe,
but declares myself to the Master

or to his wise fellows in the godly life
just as I really am.

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I abide in active energy
to give up evil things,
and to hold to good things;
staunch and strong in effort,
I shirk not the burden of righteousness;

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I have insight
and am endowed therewith
into the way of the rise and fall of things,
with Ariyan penetration
into the utter destruction öf Ill.

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?"

Verily, monks, if he have these five things,
the monk makes the destroying of the cankers
his aim.'

[1] Patthana, pa+√arth, forward-good or goal.

[2] Aṅgā.

[3] Cf. above, § 75.

[4] Comy. the sixteen, adding: writing, sealing, arithmetic, ete. Cf. Ud. 31.

[5] Anavayo. Comy. samattho, paripuṇṇo.

[6] Dhammā; Cf. above. § 53 for these, there aṅgā.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 136

Dutiya Patthanā Suttaṃ

The Aim (b)

---

[118]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if he have five things,
an anointed warrior rajah's eldest son
makes viceroyalty[1] his aim.

What five?

Herein, monks, the anointed warrior rajah
is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations
both of mother and father,
unchallenged

and without reproach
in point of birth;

▪

is handsome,
comely,
amiable,
he has a wondrous lotus-like beauty;

▪

is dear and lovely is he to his parents;

▪

dear and lovely to the army;

▪

and he is wise,
intelligent
and discreet,
able rightly to judge the future from past happenings.

§

And it occurs to him:

"I am well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations
both of mother and father,
unchallenged

and without reproach
in point of birth.

Wherefore should I not make viceroyalty my aim?

▪

I am handsome,
comely,
amiable,
and have a wondrous lotus-like beauty.

Wherefore should I not make viceroyalty my aim?

▪

I am dear and lovely is he to my parents.

Wherefore should I not make viceroyalty my aim?

▪

I am dear and lovely to the army.

Wherefore should I not make viceroyalty my aim?

▪

I am wise,
intelligent
and discreet,
able rightly to judge the future from past happenings.

Wherefore should I not make viceroyalty my aim?"

Monks, if he have these five things,
the warrior rajah's eldest son
makes viceroyalty his aim.

Even so, monks,
if he have five things,
a monk makes the destroying of the cankers
his aim.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk is virtuous,
lives restrained in the restraint of the Obligations,
perfected in conduct and habit,
seeing danger in the smallest fault,
in his endeavour,
training himself in the steps of the training;

▪

he has heard much,
bears in mind things heard,
as it were lays up in store things heard;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are heard much by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in mind,
fully understood in theory;

▪

he is he is firmly set in the fourfold stand of mindfulness;[2]

§

he abides in active energy
to give up evil things,
and to hold to good things;
staunch and strong in effort,
he shirks not the burden of righteousness;

§

he has insight
and is endowed therewith
into the way of the rise and fall of things,
with Ariyan penetration
into the utter destruction öf Ill.

§

And it occurs to him:

"I am virtuous,
live restrained in the restraint of the Obligations,
perfected in conduct and habit,

seeing danger in the smallest fault,
in my endeavour,
training myself in the steps of the training

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I have heard much,
bear in mind things heard,
as it were laying up in store things heard;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are heard much by me,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in mind,
fully understood in theory.

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I am firmly set
in the fourfold stand of mindfulness.

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I abide in active energy
to give up evil things,
and to hold to good things;
staunch and strong in effort,
I shirk not the burden of righteousness;

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?

▪

I have insight
and am endowed therewith
into the way of the rise and fall of things,
with Ariyan penetration
into the utter destruction öf Ill.

Wherefore should I not make
the destroying of the cankers
my aim?"

Verily, monks, if he have these five things,
the monk makes the destroying of the cankers
his aim.'

---

[1] Oparajja, see C.H.I. i, 488 ff.; Cf. the stages of Mahā Sudassana (D. ii, 196): kumārakiḷikaṃ kiḷi, oparajjaṃ kārtesi and rajjaṃ kāresi.

[2] Above, § 15; mindfulness as to body, feelings, mind and ideas.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 137

Appaṃ-Supati Suttaṃ

They Sleep Little

---

[118]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five sleep little by night,
they are much awake.

What five?

[119] A woman longing for a man
sleeps little by night,
is much awake;

▪

a man longing for a woman
sleeps little by night,
is much awake;

▪

a thief longing for booty
sleeps little by night,
is much awake;

▪

a rajah[1] bent on royal business
sleeps little by night,
is much awake;

▪

a monk longing for bondage-release[2]
sleeps little by night,
is much awake.

Verily, monks, these five sleep little by night,
they are much awake.'

---

[1] The text reads rājayutto, but v.l. and S.e. simply rājā.

[2] Comy: evaṃ nibbānajjhāsayo.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 138

Bhattādaka Suttaṃ

The Eater of Eatables[1]

---

[119]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things a rajah's elephant —
a gross[2] eater,
filling the ways,[3]
spilling his dung,[4]
grabbing his food[5] —
is reckoned merely[6] a rajah's elephant.

What five?

Herein, monks, the rajah's elephant cannot endure forms,

sounds, smells,
tastes
or touches.

Monks, possessed of these five a rajah's elephant —
a gross eater,
filling the ways,
spilling his dung,
grabbing his food —
is reckoned merely a rajah's elephant.

§

Even so, monks, possessed of five things a monk —
a gross eater,
filling the ways,
tumbling his bed,[7]
grabbing his food ticket — is reckoned merely a monk.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk cannot endure forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes
or touches.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five things a monk —
a gross eater,
filling the ways,
tumbling his bed,

grabbing his food ticket —
is reckoned merely a monk.'

---

[1] Bhattādā, which I suppose is the nom. of bhattādar.

[2] Bhattādako. Comy. bahu-bhatta-bhuñjo.

[3] Okasa-pharaṇo, space-pervading. Comy. okāsaṃ pharitvā, aññesaṃ sambādhaṃ katvā, ṭhānena okāsapharaṇo.

[4] Laṇḍa-sādhano, but S.e. v.l. and Comy. -sāṭano, observing: tattha tatiha laṇḍaṃ sāṭeti, pāteti. See P.E.D. s.v. saṭa; I take sāṭeti to be the causative of √śad.

[5] Salāka-gāhī Comy. ettakā hatthī-ti, gaṇanakāle salākaṃ gaṅhati.

[6] Prof. Hardy (A. v, 393) sums up the sutta as: a bh. who deserves this name is likened to a true royal elephant; but I think just the contrary must be the meaning, in view of the following sutta and above, §§ 85 and 113.

[7] Pīṭha-maddano. Comy. simply nisīdana-sayana-vasena mañca-pīṭhaṃ maddati ('by way of sitting and lying down he tumbles couch and chair').

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 139

Akkhama Suttaṃ

He Cannot Endure

---

[120]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five things a rajah's elephant is not worthy of a rajah, is no rajah's asset,[1]
is not even reckoned a rajah's portion.[2]

What five?

Herein, monks, he cannot endure forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes
or touches.

▪

And in what manner can he not endure forms?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he sees a force of elephants,
horses,
chariots
or foot soldiers,
he loses heart,
falters
and stiffens not
and cannot go down to battle[3] —

in this way an elephant, monks,
cannot endure forms.

-○-

And how can he not endure sounds?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he hears the sound of elephants,
horses,
chariots,
the noise and sound of tabor,
drum,
conch
and tom-tom[4],
he loses heart,
falters
and stiffens not
and cannot go down to battle —

in this way he cannot endure sounds.

-○-

And how can he not endure smells?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he smells the smell
of the dung and urine
of those finely bred rajah's elephants,
whose home is the battle-ground,
he loses heart,
falters
and stiffens not
and cannot go down to battle —

in this way he cannot endure smells.

-○-

And how can he not endure tastes?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he is disgusted
by a single dole of grass and water,
or by two,
three,
four or five doles,
he loses heart,
falters
and stiffens not
and cannot go down to battle —

in this way he cannot endure tastes.

-○-

And how, monks, can he not endure touches?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when, pierced by the piercing[5] of arrows,
he loses heart
and falters
and stiffens not
and cannot go down to battle —

in this way, monks, he cannot endure touches.

Monks, possessed of these five things
a rajah's elephant
is not worthy of a rajah,
is no rajah's asset,
is not even reckoned a rajah's portion.

§

[121] In just the same way, monks, possessed of five things[6]
a monk is not worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
is not meet to be reverently saluted,
is not the world's peerless field for merit.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk cannot endure forms,
sounds,
smells,

tastes
or touches.

■

And how, monks, can he not endure forms?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
seeing forms with the eye,
is lured[7] by alluring forms and cannot compose[8] his mind —

in this way he cannot endure forms.

-○-

And how, monks, can he not endure sounds?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
hearing sounds with the ear,
is lured by alluring sounds
and cannot compose his mind —

in this way he cannot endure sounds.

-○-

And how, monks, can he not endure smells?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
smelling smells with the nose, is lured by alluring smells
and cannot compose his mind —

in this way he cannot endure smells.

-○-

And how, monks, can he not endure tastes?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
tasting tastes with the tongue, is lured by alluring tastes
and cannot compose his mind —

in this way he cannot endure tastes.

-○-

And how, monks, can he not endure touches?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
touching touches with the body,
is lured by alluring touches
and cannot compose his mind —

in this way he cannot endure touches.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is not worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
is not meet to be reverently saluted,
is not the world's peerless field for merit.'

"Monks, possessed of five things a rajah's elephant is worthy of a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

What five?

Herein, monks, a rajah's elephant endures forms,
sounds,

smells,
tastes
and touches.

▪

And in what manner does he endure forms?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he sees a force of elephants,
horses,
chariots
or foot soldiers,
he does not lose heart,
he does not falter
and stiffens
and goes down to battle —

in this way an elephant, monks,
endures forms.

-○-

And how does he endure sounds?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he hears the sound of elephants,
horses,
chariots,
the noise and sound of tabor,
drum,
conch
and tom-tom,
he does not lose heart,
he does not falter

and stiffens
and goes down to battle —

in this way an elephant, monks, endures sounds.

-○-

And how does he endure smells?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he smells the smell
of the dung and urine
of those finely bred rajah's elephants,
whose home is the battle-ground,
he does not lose heart,
he does not falter
and stiffens
and goes down to battle —

in this way an elephant, monks, endures smells.

-○-

And how does he endure tastes?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when he is disgusted
by a single dole of grass and water,
or by two,
three,
four
or five doles,
he does not lose heart,

he does not falter
and stiffens
and goes down to battle —

in this way an elephant, monks, endures tastes.

-○-

And how, monks, does he endure touches?

Take the case, monks, of a rajah's elephant
going forth to fight,
when, pierced by the piercing of arrows,
he does not lose heart,
he does not falter
and stiffens
and goes down to battle —

in this way an elephant, monks,
endures touches.

Monks, possessed of these five things
a rajah's elephant
is worthy of a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

▪

In just the same way, monks,
possessed of five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
is meet to be reverently saluted,
is the world's peerless field for merit.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk endures forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes
and touches.

-○-

And how, monks, does he endure forms?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
seeing forms with the eye,
is not lured by alluring forms and composes his mind —

in this way he endures forms.

-○-

And how, monks, does he endure sounds?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
hearing sounds with the ear,
is not lured by alluring sounds
and composes his mind —

in this way he endures sounds.

-○-

And how, monks, does he endure smells?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
smelling smells with the nose,
is not lured by alluring smells
and composes his mind —

in this way he endures smells.

-○-

And how, monks, does he endure tastes?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
tasting tastes with the tongue,
is not lured by alluring tastes
and composes his mind —

in this way he endures tastes.

-○-

And how, monks, does he endure touches?

Take the case, monks, of the monk who,
touching touches with the body,
is not lured by alluring touches
and composes his mind —

in this way he endures touches.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
is meet to be reverently saluted,
is the world's peerless field for merit.'

---

[1] Cf. A. i, 244, 284; ii, 113, 170; iv, 188.

[2] Aṅga.

[3] Cf. above, § 75.

[4] Tiṇava; the set recurs at A. ii, 117.

[5] Our text reads -vegena, but S.e. with v.l. vedhena, which makes better tense.

[6] Here dhammā, but aṅgā of the elephant.

[7] Rajanīye rūpe sārajjati.

[8] Samādahituṃ. Comy. sammā ṭhapetuṃ, to rightly fix.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
14. Rāja Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIV: The Rajah

Sutta 140

Sotāra Suttaṃ

The Hearers

---

[121]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] possessed of five things
a rajah's elephant is worthy of a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is verily reckoned a rajah's portion.

What five?

Herein, monks he is a hearer,
a destroyer,
a warder,
an endurer
and a goer.

▪

And how, monks, is the rajah's elephant a hearer?

Monks, as soon as the tamer of tamable elephants tasks him with a [122] task, whether done before or not;
making it his business,
setting his mind to it,
bringing his whole heart to bear on it,
he hears with bended ear.

Monks, in this way
the rajah's elephant is a hearer.

-○-

And how is he a destroyer?

Monks, the rajah's elephant,
gone forth to fight,
destroys an elephant,
destroys the rider,
destroys a horse,
destroys the rider,
destroys a chariot,
destroys the rider,
and indeed destroys a foot soldier.

Monks, in this way
he is a destroyer.

-○-

And how is he a warder?

Monks, the rajah's elephant,
gone forth to fight,
wards his fore part,
he wards his hind part,
he wards his fore feet,
he wards his hind feet,
he wards his head,
his ears,
his tusks,
his trunk,
his tail,
he wards his rider.

Monks, in this way
he is a warder.

-○-

And how is he an endurer?

Monks, the rajah's elephant,
gone forth to fight,
endures the blow of the spear,
the blow of the sword,
the blow of the arrow,
the blow of the axe,
the sound and noise of tabor,
drum,
conch
and tom-tom.

Monks, in this way
he is an endurer.

-○-

And how is he a goer?

Monks, as soon as his driver sends him to some place, whether it has been gone to before or not,
he even quickly is a goer there.

Monks, in this way
the rajah's elephant is a goer. Monks, possessing these five things a rajah's elephant is worthy of a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is verily reckoned a rajah's portion.

§

In just the same way, monks,
possessed of five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
is meet to be reverently saluted,
is the world's peerless field for merit.

What five?

In this case also, monks,
he is a hearer,
a destroyer,
a warder,
an endurer
and a goer.

▪

And how is he a hearer?

Monks, when the Dhamma-discipline, declared by the Tathāgata, is being taught;
making it his object,
setting his mind to it,
bringing his whole heart to bear on it,
he listens with bended ear.

Monks, in this way
he is a hearer.

-○-

And how is he a destroyer?

Monks, he lets not the surge[2] of lustful thoughts abide,
but voids[3] them forth,
drives them [123] out
makes an end of them completely
and makes them go
where there is no becoming;

—

he lets not the surge of fell thoughts abide,
but voids them forth,
drives them out
makes an end of them completely
and makes them go
where there is no becoming;

—

he lets not the surge of cruel thoughts abide,
but voids them forth,
drives them out
makes an end of them completely

and makes them go
where there is no becoming;

—

he lets not the continuous surge of evil and wrong ideas,[4]
but voids them forth,
drives them out
makes an end of them completely
and makes them go
where there is no becoming.

Monks, in this way
he is a destroyer.

-○-

And how is he a warder?

Monks, on seeing a form with the eye,
he is not entranced[5] with its appearance or detail;
since by abiding uncontrolled in the sight-sense,
covetousness,
dejection;
and wicked and evil thoughts
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the sight-sense;
he wards the sight-sense and wins control over the sight-sense.

—

So too, on hearing a sound with the ear,
he is not entranced with its appearance or detail;
since by abiding uncontrolled in the hearing-sense,
covetousness,
dejection;

and wicked and evil thoughts
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the hearing-sense;
he wards the hearing-sense and wins control over the hearing-sense.

—

So too, on smelling a smell with the nose,
he is not entranced with its appearance or detail;
since by abiding uncontrolled in the smell-sense,
covetousness,
dejection;
and wicked and evil thoughts
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the smell-sense;
he wards the smell-sense and wins control over the smell-sense.

—

So too, on tasting a taste with the tongue,
he is not entranced with its appearance or detail;
since by abiding uncontrolled in the tasting-sense,
covetousness,
dejection;
and wicked and evil thoughts
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the tasting-sense;
he wards the tasting-sense and wins control over the tasting-sense.

—

So too, on touching a touch with the body,
he is not entranced with its appearance or detail;
since by abiding uncontrolled in the touching-sense,

covetousness,
dejection;
and wicked and evil thoughts
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the touching-sense;
he wards the touching-sense and wins control over the touching-sense.

—

So too, on apprehending an idea with the mind,
he is not entranced with its appearance or detail;
since by abiding uncontrolled in the apprehension-sense,
covetousness,
dejection;
and wicked and evil thoughts
would flow in over him,
he sets himself to control the apprehension-sense;
he wards the apprehension-sense and wins control over the apprehension-sense.

Monks, in this way he is a warder.

-○-

And how is he an endurer?

Monks, he endures cold,
heat,
hunger,
thirst;
the bite of gadfly,
gnat,
wind,
heat
and creeping thing,
rough,

unwelcome[6] ways of speech;
he is the kind of man who abides the onset of bodily aches and pains that rack
and shoot
and stab,
bitter,
galling
and life-taking.[7]

Monks, in this way he is an endurer.

-○-

And how, monks, is he a goer?

Monks, that quarter where in this long journeying on he has not been before,
where there is rest for all things made,
a complete pouring[8] away
of all (rebirth) substance, a destruction of craving,
a release from passion,
an ending,
Nibbāna[9] —
verily be quickly is a goer thither.

Monks, in this way the monk is a goer.

[124] Monks, possessed of these five things
a monk is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,

meet to he reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

---

[1] Cf. the whole sutta with A. ii, 116.

[2] Uppanna, and lower, uppannuppanna.

[3] Pajahati. For the phrase Cf. It. 115; Mil. 11; D. iii, 226; A. ii, 118, where the whole section recurs, also M. i, 115 with anabhāvaṃ gameti omitted. (P.E.D. s.v. anabhāvay considers this a late idiom [?].)

[4] Dhammā.

[5] Cf. above, § 76.

[6] Durāgata.

[7] Cf. M. i, 10; A. v, 132; Vin. i, 78; below IV, § 58; [sic. VI § 58] above, § 123.

[8] Sabb'ūpadhi-paṭinissaggo, from √sṛj to pour out.

[9] S. iii, 133; A, ii, 118; v, 8.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove[1]

Sutta 141

Avajānāti Suttaṃ

He Gives and Despises

---

[124]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five persons are found living in the world.

What five?

One who gives and despises a man;
one who despises a man by living with him;
one who has a mouth[2] to take in anything;
one who wavers;
and one who is foolish and mind-[3] tossed.

§

And how, monks, does a person give and despise a man?

Herein, monks, a person
to a person
gives requisites;
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicaments,
and thinks:

I give;
this fellow receives!

He gives and despises him.

Thus, monks, a person gives and despises a man.

▪

And how, monks, does a person despise a man by living with him?

Herein, monks, a person
lives with a person
for two or three years.

By living with him
he despises him.

Thus, monks, a person despises a man
by living with him.

▪

And how, monks, has a person a mouth to take in anything?

Herein, monks, a person,
while another is being spoken of
in praise or blame,
just promptly[4] revels in it.

Thus, monks, a person
has a mouth to take in anything.

▪

And how, monks, does a person waver?

Herein, monks, a person is uncertain[5] in faith, uncertain in devotion,[6]
uncertain in love,
uncertain in goodness.

Thus, monks, a person wavers.

▪

[125] And how, monks, is a person foolish and mind-tossed?

Herein, monks, a person
does not know good conditions from bad;
does not know blameworthy conditions from blameless;
does not know low conditions from lofty;

does not know whether conditions are evenly mixed with bright and dark qualities.[7]

Thus, monks, a person
is foolish and mind-tossed.

Verily, monks, these five persons are found living in the world.'

---

[1] Tikaṇḍaki; so S.e., but see K.S. v, 264 n., 'Cactus Grove.'

[2] Ādiyamukha. S.e. with v.l. ādiyya-. Comy. ādiyana-, gahaṇa-; pāliya pana ṭhapitamukho-ti attho, adding: (his mouth) is like a hole dug in the road with water continually flowing into it. P.E.D. suggests gossip, but the literal meaning is the complement.

[3] Above, § 93.

[4] Khippaṃ.

[5] Ittara. Comy. parittaka.

[6] Bhatti = bhakti; see DhS. trsl. 345 n. and correct accordingly.

[7] Cf. Mil. 379.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 142

Ārabhati Suttaṃ

He Does Amiss

---

[125]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five persons are found living in the world.

What five?

There is the case, monks,
of a person who does amiss
and is dejected[1]
and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges[2]

of evil and wrong states
end entirely;

▪

there is one who does amiss
and is not dejected
and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges
of evil and wrong states
end entirely;

▪

one who does not amiss
but is dejected
and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges
of evil and wrong states
end entirely;

▪

one who does not amiss
and is not dejected
and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges

of evil and wrong states
end entirely;

■

and there is one who does not amiss
and is not dejected
and knows,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges
of evil and wrong states
end entirely.

§

There, monks, he who does amiss
and is dejected
and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges
of evil and wrong states
end entirely;
this may be said of him:

Verily to the venerable one the cankers,
born of doing amiss,[3]
are discovered;
the cankers born of dejection wax:[ed1]
well were it for the venerable one

to rid himself of the cankers,
born of misdeeds,
to drive out the cankers,
born of dejection,
and to make mind and insight more-become:
then will the venerable one become
the very same with this fifth person.

▪

And he who does amiss
and is not dejected
and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges
of evil and wrong states
end entirely;
this may [126] be said of him:

Verily to the venerable one the cankers,
born of doing amiss,
are discovered;
but the cankers born of dejection wax not:
well were it for the venerable one
to rid himself of the cankers,
born of misdeeds,
and to make mind and insight more-become:
then will the venerable one become
the very same with this fifth person.

▪

And who does not amiss
but is dejected

and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges
of evil and wrong states
end entirely;
this may be said of him:

Verily to the venerable one the cankers,
born of doing amiss,
are not discovered;
but the cankers born of dejection wax:
well were it for the venerable one
to rid himself of the cankers,
born of dejection,
and to make mind and insight more-become:
then will the venerable one become
the very same with this fifth person.

▪

and he who does not amiss
and is not dejected
and knows not,
as it really is,
that mind-release,
that insight-release,
wherein for him these surges
of evil and wrong states
end entirely;
this may be said of him:

Verily to the venerable one the cankers,
born of doing amiss,
are not discovered;

and the cankers born of dejection wax not:
well were it for the venerable one
to make mind and insight more-become:
then will the venerable one become
the very same with this fifth person.

■

Thus verily, monks,
these four persons with this fifth,
being so exhorted,
so counselled,
gradually win to the destruction of the cankers.'

---

[1] Ārabhati ca vippaṭisārī ca. Comy. āpatti-vītikkama-vasena ārabhati c'eva tappaccayā ca vippaṭisārī hoti. Ārabhati is lit. to start (doing something); and vippaṭisārī: strongly remembering something against (oneself), so generally 'remorse.' Cf. Pug. 64.

[2] Te uppannā.

[3] The text reads ārabbhajā, but S.e. with v.l. and Comy. ārambhajā

[ed1] Hare's construction of these goes: "...the cankers, born of doing amiss, are discovered; born of dejection they wax...". This creates problems in the following sections which he has abridged with the indication that this pattern should be followed. I have altered his rendering to parallel the Pali.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 143

Sārandada Suttaṃ

At Sarandada Shrine

---

[126]

Thus have I heard:

Once, while he dwelt near Vesālī,
at the Gabled Hall in Mahāvana,
the Exalted One early one morning,
after dressing,
took bowl and robe
and entered Vesālī for alms.

▪

Nöw at that time
about five hundred Licchavis were met and seated at Sārandada[1] shrine and this chance talk occurred:

'Rarely are the five treasures[2] revealed in the world.

What five?

Rarely is the elephant treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the horse treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the the jewel treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the the woman treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the rarely the householder
treasure revealed in the world.

Rarely are these five treasures
revealed in the world.'

▪

Now these Licchavis had put a man in the road, saying:

"When, my man, you see the Exalted One coming along,
come and tell us."

And the man saw the Exalted One a good way off coming along,
and went and told the Licchavis, saying:

"Sirs,[3] here comes this same Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened;
and now is the time
to do what you meant!"

▪

And the Licchavis approached the Exalted One,
saluted him
and stood at one side;
and so standing they said:

'Lord, [127] it were good if the Exalted One were to visit Sārandada shrine
out of compassion!'

The Exalted One accepted in silence.

And when he had come to the shrine,
he sat down on the seat they had made ready;
and so seated
he said this to the Licchavis:

'What talked ye of, 0 Licchavis, as ye sat here together just now;
what talk between you was interrupted?'

▪

'Lord, as we sat together
the talk turned on how rarely the five treasures are revealed[4] in the world.

What five?

Rarely is the elephant treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the horse treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the the jewel treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the the woman treasure
revealed in the world.

Rarely the rarely the householder
treasure revealed in the world.

Rarely are these five treasures
revealed in the world.'

§

'Truly with you Licchavis, sense-enthralled,[5]
talk between you
turns just to things of the flesh!

Five, O Licchavis, are the treasures rarely revealed in the world.

What five?

The[6] Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
is rarely revealed in the world;

▪

rare in the world
is a person able to teach discipline and Dhamma, declared by the Tathāgata;

▪

rare in the world
is a person able to recognize the teaching,
declared by the Tathāgata;

▪

rare in the world
is a person who has stepped his way[7] in Dhamma by Dhamma, recognizing the teaching, Dhamma and discipline,
declared by the Tathāgata;

▪

rare in the world
is a person who is grateful and thankful.[8]

Verily, 0 Licchavis, these are the five treasures rarely revealed in the world.'

---

[1] A yakkka shrine; see K.S. v, 231 n.

[2] Generally seven, the other two being the wheel and the minister; see Dial. ii, 202-8; [BS DN 17] A. iv, 89.

[3] Bhante.

[4] Pātu-bhāvo, the making become manifest.

[5] Kamādhimuttānaṃ. Comy. vatthu-kāma-kilesa-kāmesu adhimuttānaṃ.

[6] Cf. below V, § 196; VI, § 96.

[7] Dhammānudhamma-paṭipanno.

[8] See K.S. ii, 183 and the Jackal simile, also G.S. i, 72 n.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 144

Tikaṇḍakī Suttaṃ

At Three-thorn Grove

---

[127]

Thus have I heard:

Once, while dwelling near Sāketa at Three-thorn Grove,
the Exalted One addressed the monks,
saying:

"Monks!"

'Lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, good is it for a monk
from time to time
to abide conscious of the distasteful
in what is not distasteful;[1]

▪

monks, good is it for a monk
from time to time
to abide conscious of what is not distasteful
in the distasteful;

▪

monks, good is it for a monk
from time to time
to abide conscious of the distasteful
in both what is not and what is distasteful;

▪

monks, good is it for a monk
from time to time
to abide [128] conscious of what is not distasteful
in both what is and what is not distasteful;

▪

monks, good is it for a monk
from time to time,
rid[2] of all that,
both the distasteful and what is not,
to abide in poise,[3] mindful and self-possessed.

§

Monks, pressing toward what good mark[4]
should a monk abide
conscious of the distasteful
in what is not distasteful?

"May the passion of impassioning things
surge not within me!" —

it is verily pressing toward this good mark
that a monk abides
conscious of the distasteful
in what is not distasteful.

▪

Monks, pressing toward what good mark
should a monk abide
conscious of what is not distasteful
in the distasteful?

"May the defilement of defiling things
surge not within me!" —

it is verily pressing toward this good mark that a monk abides conscious of what is not distasteful
in the distasteful.

▪

Monks, pressing toward what good mark
should a monk abide
conscious of the distasteful
in both what is not and what is distasteful?

"May the passion of impassioning things
surge not within me!" —

"May the defilement of defiling things
surge not within me!" —

it is verily pressing toward this good mark
that a monk abides
conscious of the distasteful
in both what is not and what is distasteful.

▪

Monks, pressing toward what good mark
should a monk abide
conscious of what is not distasteful
in both what is and what is not distasteful?

"May the defilement of defiling things
surge not within me!" —

"May the passion of impassioning things
surge not within me!" —

it is verily pressing toward this good mark
that a monk abides
conscious of what is not distasteful
in both what is and what is not distasteful.

▪

Monks, pressing toward what good mark should a monk abide
in poise,
mindful and self-possessed,
rid of both the distasteful
and what is not distasteful?

"May never anywhere,[5]
in any place,
in any way,
within me
surge the passion of impassioning things;
may never anywhere,
in any place,
in any way,
within me
surge the defilement of defiling things;

may never anywhere,
in any place,
in any way,
within me
[129] surge the confusion of confounding things!" —

it is verily pressing toward this good mark
that a monk abides in poise,
mindful and self-possessed,
rid of both the distasteful
and what is not distasteful.'

---

[1] Appaṭikkūle. Comy. -ārammaṇe. Cf. Dial. iii, 107; K.S. v, 100 for the whole section.

[2] Tad-ubhayaṃ abhivajjetvā, elsewhere translated avoiding; Cf. It. 81.

[3] Upekkhako. Comy. majjhatta-bhāve ṭhito. Cf. the late Lord Northcliffe: 'The important thing is poise. ... Poise in all things and at all times. So few men have it.' (My Northcliffe Diary, by Mr. Tom Clarke.)

[4] Attha-vasaṃ paṭicca; Cf. above, § 57; on attha see Mrs. Rhys Davids' Sakya; vasa means originally, will, wish, desire; so: aim, purpose; paṭicca is the ger. of pacceti, to go against; Cf. Philippians iii, 14.

[5] Kvacini katthaci kiñcana. Comy. kismici ārammaṇe; kismici padese; koci appamattako pi.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 145

Niraya Suttaṃ

The Way to Hell

---

[129]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

'Pursuing five things, monks,
one is surely cast into hell as the reward.

What five?

One destroys life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, pursuing these five things
one is surely cast into hell as the reward.'

§

'Abstaining[ed1] from five things, monks,
one is surely cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

One abstains from destroying life,
one abstains from taking what is not given,
one abstains from lusting after evil,
one abstains from lying,
one abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, abstaining from these five things
one is surely cast into heaven as the reward.'

[ed1] Hare abridges the second half of this sutta with: "But abstaining from these five things one is cast into heaven." The Pali however has (in Hare's terms) "pursuing" which Hare appears to think is an error. The confusion comes from not understanding that abstention is intentional consequently "pursued" is correct.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 146

Bhikkhu Mitta Suttaṃ

The Friend

---

[129]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, seek ye not a monk for a friend whose ways are five.

What five?

He works at (field)[1] work;
busies himself in affairs;[2]
is at enmity with eminent monks;
spends his life taking the long way,
the way without an object;[3]
and cannot from time to time incite, arouse,

gladden
and satisfy one with Dhamma talk.

Verily, monks, seek not a monk for a friend whose ways are these.'

§

"Monks, seek ye a monk for a friend whose ways are five.

What five?

He does not work at (field) work;
he does not busy himself in affairs;
he is not at enmity with eminent monks;
he does not spend his life taking the long way,
the way without an object;
he can from time to time incite,
arouse,
gladden
and satisfy one with Dhamma talk.

Verily, monks, seek a monk for a friend whose ways are these.'

---

[1] So Comy.

[2] Comy. the four; these can hardly be the four at M. ii, 247.

[3] Ana-vattha. Comy. a-vavatthāna-. Cf. below V, § 221.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 147

Asappurisa-Dāna Suttaṃ

Not a Good Man's Gifts

---

[129]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are not a good man's gifts.

What five?

He[1] gives without deference;
gives without thinking;
gives not with his own hand;
gives orts;
he gives holding no views as to the future.[2]

Verily, monks, these five are not a good man's gifts.'

§

"Monks, these five are a good man's gifts.

What five?

He gives with deference;
gives with thought;
gives with his own hand;
gives non-orts;
gives holding views as to the future.

Verily, monks, these five are a good man's gifts.'

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 392.

[2] Comy. on the opposite: he gives believing in deed (kamma: karma) and result. Cf. below VI, § 92.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 148

Sappurisa-Dāna Suttaṃ

A Good Man's Gifts

---

[130]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are a good man's gifts.

What five?

He gives a gift in faith,
with deference,
in time,
with unconstrained[1] heart,
he gives a gift without hurt to self or others.

§

And in giving a gift in faith,
wheresoever the full[2] result of that gift ripens,
there comes wealth, riches and great property,
and he is fair to look upon,
handsome,
with the wondrous beauty of the lotus.[3]

▪

And in giving a gift with deference,
wheresoever the full result of that gift ripens,
there comes wealth, riches and great property,
and his[4] children and wife, his slaves, messengers and work-folk hearken diligently unto him, lend ear
and serve him with understanding heart.[5]

▪

And in giving a gift in time,
wheresoever the full result of that gift ripens,
there comes wealth, riches and great property,
and the goods that come to him in time[6] are abundant.

▪

And in giving a gift with unconstrained heart,
wheresoever the full result of that gift ripens,
there comes wealth, riches and great property,
and he bends the mind

to enjoy the fullness[7]
of the fivefold joy of the senses.

▪

And in giving a gift without hurt to self or others,
wheresoever the full result of that gift ripens,
there comes wealth, riches and great property,
and never from anywhere comes hurt to his property either from fire
or water,
rajahs
or thieves,
or impious heirs.[8]

Verily, monks, these are the five gifts of a good man.'

---

[1] Our text reads anuggahitacitto; so S.e., but Comy. with v.l. anaggahīta-, observing: agahitacitto, muttacāgo hutvā. See DhS. trsl. 301 n. and above, § 44 n.

[2] Vipāka.

[3] Cf. above, § 75.

[4] D. i, 230; A. iv, 303; Vin. i, 10; above, § 79.

[5] Aññācittaṃ.

[6] Kālāgatā c'assa atthā pacurā The Comy. is not very clear, but I think it means atthā come, not in old age (vayo-vuddka-kāle), but in the fit and proper time, in youth (paṭhama-vayasmiṃ).

[7] Uḷāra.

[8] Cf. below V, § 227.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 149

Paṭhama Samaya-Vimutta Suttaṃ

Occasional Release

---

[131]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things
lead to the falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.[1]

What five?

Delight in (body) work,
delight in gossip,
delight in sleep,
delight in company
and he does not look at the mind apart[2]
as released.

Verily, monks, these five things
lead to the falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.

§

"Monks, these five things
lead to the not falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.

What five?

Non-delight in (body) work,
non-delight in gossip,
non-delight in sleep,
non-delight in company
and he looks at the mind apart
as released.

Verily, monks, these five things
lead to the not falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.

---

[1] Samaya-vimutta. P.E.D. wrongly 'finally emancipated'; our Comy. just in momentary flashes (appit'appita-khaṇe, appeti means both to fix and to rush on) with the depravities discarded, there is a state of release; Cf. SnA. 105; SA. i, 182. Were it not that the idea of 'temporary release' recurs at Sn. 54, one might judge it to be a late development. It occurs seldom. See K.S. i, 150 n. The sutta is quoted at Pts. of Contr. 70.

[2] Paccavekkhati, to view something over against (paṭi).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
15. Tikaṇḍaki Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XV: Three-thorn Grove

Sutta 150

Dutiya Samaya-Vimutta Suttaṃ

Occasional Release (b)

---

[131]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things
lead to the falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.

What five?

Delight in (body) work,
delight in gossip,
delight in sleep,
delight in unguarded doors of the senses,
no moderation in eating.

Verily, monks, these five things
lead to the falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.

§

"Monks, these five things
lead to the not falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.

What five?

Non-delight in (body) work,
non-delight in gossip,
non-delight in sleep,
non-delight in unguarded doors of the senses,
and moderation in eating.

Verily, monks, these five things
lead to the not falling away
of a monk who is occasionally released.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 151

Paṭhama Sammatta-Niyāma Suttaṃ

The Saddhamma Way (a)

---

[131]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
and not hearkening unto Saddhamma
he does not become one to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.

What five?

He belittles talk,
belittles the talker,
he belittles the self,
he hears Dhamma with perturbed mind and does not, with mind one-pointed,

make thinking orderly.

Verily, monks, pursuing these five courses
and not hearkening unto Saddhamma
he does not become one
to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.'

§

"Monks, pursuing five courses
and hearkening unto Saddhamma
he must become[1] one to enter the way,[2]
the right way[3]
in right things.

What five?

He does not belittle[4] talk,
nor belittle the talker,
he does not belittle the self,
hears Dhamma with unperturbed mind
and with mind one-pointed,
makes[5] thinking orderly.

[132] Verily, monks, pursuing these five courses
and hearkening unto Saddhamma
he must become one
to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.'

---

[1] Bhabbo should or ought to become. ('Not "should do!" Must, must, must do!" ... "Should" is to-morrow, "must" is to-day!' — Benito Mussolini the Man: V. J. Bordeau.) See Mm. Rhys Davids' Sakya, p. 324; Manual, p. 128.

[2] Niyāma.

[3] Sammatta, the state of sam √ī going along well.

[4] Pari-bhoti (-bhavati).

[5] Manasi-karoti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: saddhamma

Sutta 152

Dutiya Sammatta-Niyāma Suttaṃ

The Saddhamma Way (b)

---

[132]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
and not hearkening unto saddhamma
he does not become one to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.

What five?

He belittles talk,
belittles the talker,
he belittles the self,

is stupid, a dullard and lack-wit
and is not given[1] to thinking of his knowledge of the unknown.

Verily, monks, pursuing these five courses
and not hearkening unto saddhamma
he does not become one
to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.'

§

"Monks, pursuing five courses
and hearkening unto saddhamma
he must become one to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.

What five?

He does not belittle talk,
nor belittle the talker,
he does not belittle the self,
hears Dhamma with unperturbed mind
is filled with insight, no dullard or lack-wit,
given to thinking of his knowledge of the unknown.

Verily, monks, pursuing these five courses
and hearkening unto saddhamma
he must become one
to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.'

[1] -mānī, a causative formation from √man, to think; a man, opinionated, so conceited. Cf. Brethr. 336: 'Deeming they know the depths of truth.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 153

Tatiya Sammatta-Niyāma Suttaṃ

The Saddhamma Way (c)

---

[132]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, pursuing five courses
and not hearkening unto Saddhamma
he does not become one to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.

What five?

Unctuously he hearkens to Dhamma, unctuously prepossessed,
he hearkens with captiousness,
seeking flaws,

at Dhamma-teaching time his heart is smitten
and barren,
is stupid, a dullard and lack-wit
and is not given to thinking of his knowledge of the unknown.

Verily, monks, pursuing these five courses
and not hearkening unto Saddhamma
he does not become one
to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.'

§

"Monks, pursuing five courses
and hearkening unto Saddhamma
he must become one to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.

What five?

Without unction[1] he hearkens to Dhamma, not unctuously prepossessed,
he hearkens without captiousness[2],
without seeking flaws,
at Dhamma-teaching time his heart is not smitten[3]
nor barren,
hears Dhamma with unperturbed mind
is filled with insight, no dullard or lack-wit,
given to thinking of his knowledge of the unknown.

Verily, monks, pursuing these five courses
and hearkening unto Saddhamma
he must become one
to enter the way,
the right way
in right things.'

---

[1] Makkha, lit. to smear.

[2] Upārambha-. Comy. niggahāropana-.

[3] Dhamma-desake anāhata°-akhilajāto; Cf. Psalm cii, 4: 'My heart is smitten and withered like grass.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 154

Paṭhama Saddhamma-Sammosa Suttaṃ

The Confounding of Saddhamma (a)

---

[132]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things
lead to the confounding,[1]
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

What five?

Herein, monks, carelessly[2] the monks hear Dhamma;
carelessly they master it;
carelessly they bear it in mind;
carelessly they test the good of the things borne in mind;
knowing the good and knowing Dhamma,
carelessly they go their ways in Dhamma by Dhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five things
that lead to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.'

§

"Monks, these five things
lead to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-appearances of Saddhamma.

What five?

Herein, monks, carefully the monks hear Dhamma;
carefully they master it;
carefully they bear it in mind;
carefully they test the good of the things borne in mind;
knowing the good and knowing Dhamma,
carefully they go their ways in Dhamma by Dhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five things
that lead to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

---

[1] Sammosa.

[2] Na sakkaccaṃ, not doing the right thing. From sat-karoti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 155

Dutiya Saddhamma-Sammosa Suttaṃ

The Confounding of Saddhamma (b)

---

[133]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things
lead to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monks master not Dhamma:
the sayings, psalms, catechisms, songs, solemnities, speeches, birth-stories,
marvels, runes.[1]

This, monks, is the first thing
that leads to the confounding,

the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They teach not others Dhamma in detail,
as heard,
as learned.

This, monks, is the second thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They make not others speak it in detail,
as heard,
as learned.

This, monks, is the third thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They make no repetition of it in detail,
as heard,
as learned.

This, monks, is the fourth thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

Again, monks, the monks do not in their hearts
turn over and ponder upon Dhamma,
they review it not in their minds.

This, monks, is the fifth thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

Monks, these are the five things
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

§

"Monks, these five things
lead to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monks master Dhamma:
the sayings, psalms, catechisms, songs, solemnities, speeches, birth-stories,
marvels, runes.

This, monks, is the first thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They teach others Dhamma in detail,
as heard,
as learned.

This, monks, is the second thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They make others speak it in detail,
as heard,
as learned.

This, monks, is the third thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They make repetition of it in detail,
as heard,
as learned.

This, monks, is the fourth thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

Again, monks, the monks in their hearts
turn over and ponder upon Dhamma,
they review it not in their minds.

This, monks, is the fifth thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five things
that lead to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

---

[1] See Expos. i, 33 ff.; above, § 73.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 156

Tatiya Saddhamma-Sammosa Suttaṃ

The Confounding of Saddhamma (c)

---

[133]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five things
lead to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monks master an ill-grasped saying,[1] ill-arranged as to word and letter;
monks, when it is so ill-arranged,
the meaning[2] also is an ill deduction.

This, monks, is the first thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They are speakers of ill,
whose ways make for unruliness,
without endurance,
with little talent for grasping instruction.[3]

This, monks, is the second thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

[134] And the monks who have heard much,
to whom the traditional lore[4] has come down,
the Dhamma-bearers,
the Discipline-bearers,
the Summary-[5] bearers;
they make not another say a saying carefully;
and because of them
the saying becomes like a thing with its roots[6] cut and no refuge.

This, monks, is the third thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

Again, the elders[7] are luxurious,
lax,
prime-movers in back-sliding,

who shirk the burden of the secluded life, nor put forth effort
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized;
and the folk who come after them
fall into the way of (wrong) views;
and they too become luxurious,
lax,
prime-movers in backsliding,
shirking the burden of the secluded life,
putting forth no effort
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

This, monks, is the fourth thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

Moreover, monks, the Order[8] is broken;
then there is reviling between one another,
accusation between one another,
quarrelling between one another,
repudiation between one another;
and they of no faith
do not find faith there
and the faithful
become otherwise.

This, monks, is the fifth thing
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

Monks, these are the five things
that leads to the confounding,
the disappearance of Saddhamma.

§

"Monks, these five things
lead to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

What five?[ed1]

Herein, monks, the monks master a well-grasped saying,
well-arranged as to word and letter;
monks, when it is so well-arranged,
the meaning also is a good deduction.

This, monks, is the first thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

They are well-spoken,
with ways making for concord,
with endurance,
with talent for grasping instruction.

This, monks, is the second thing
that leads to the stability,

non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

And the monks who have heard much,
to whom the traditional lore has come down,
the Dhamma-bearers,
the Discipline-bearers,
the Summary-bearers;
they make another say a saying carefully;
and because of them
the saying does not become like a thing with its roots cut,
and is a refuge.

This, monks, is the third thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

Again, the elders are not luxurious,
or lax,
are not prime-movers in back-sliding,
do not shirk the burden of the secluded life,
they put forth effort
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized;
and the folk who come after them
do not fall into the way of (wrong) views;
and become luxurious,
or lax,
and are not prime-movers in backsliding,
do not shirk the burden of the secluded life,

and put forth effort
to attain the unattained,
to master the unmastered,
to realize the unrealized.

This, monks, is the fourth thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

▪

Moreover, monks, the Order is unified;
there is no reviling one another,
no accusation between one another,
no quarrelling between one another,
no repudiation between one another;
and they of no faith
find faith there
and the faithful
increase in their faith.

This, monks, is the fourth thing
that leads to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five things
that lead to the stability,
non-confounding,
to the non-disappearance of Saddhamma.

---

[1] Suttanta. Cf. above, No. 79.

[2] Attha. Cf. A. i, 59 for this section, and the whole sutta with A. ii, 147, where suttanta = 'text.' We see here attha having the import of 'meaning,' as a later preoccupation rather than that of 'weal' or 'thing-of-quest,' as in Nos. 57, 123, etc.

[3] Appa-dakkhiṇa-ggāhino. See M. i, 95; K.S. ii, 137, reading apa-.

[4] Āgatāgamā, what is handed down.

[5] Mātihadharā, lit. channels, the proto-Abhidhamma.

[6] Chinna-mūlako appaṭisaraṇo.

[7] Above, § 79.

[8] Above, § 54.

[ed1] Hare has abridged with 'But acting in the opposite way leads to its stability' where 'the opposite' of the language in the previous half does not precisely fit. I have reconstructed the section following Hare as closely as I could while consulting the Pali.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 157

Dukkathā Suttaṃ

Ill Talk

---

[134]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, to five persons
talk is ill talk
when the appropriate person is confronted.[1]

Of what five?

Monks, to the faithless
faith-talk is ill talk;
to the virtueless
virtue-talk is ill talk;
to the little learned
learned-talk is ill talk;

to the mean
generosity-talk is ill talk;
to the lack-brain[2]
insight-talk is ill talk.

§

[135] And wherefore, monks, is faith-talk to the faithless
ill talk?

Monks, the faithless,
when faith-talk is talked,
are roused,[3]
angered,
upset,
made obstinate;
they show temper,
ill-will and sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive no achieving of faith in themselves and they get no joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the faithless
faith-talk is ill talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is virtue-talk
to the virtueless
ill talk?

Monks, the virtueless,
when virtue-talk is talked,
are roused,
angered,
upset,
made obstinate;
they show temper,
ill-will and sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive no achieving of virtue in themselves
and they get no joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the virtueless virtue-talk is ill talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is learned-talk
to the little learned
ill talk?

Monks, the little learned,
when learned-talk is talked,
are roused,
angered,
upset,
made obstinate;
they show temper,
ill-will and sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive no achieving of learning in themselves
and they get no joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the little learned learned-talk is ill talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is generosity-talk
to the mean
ill talk?

Monks, the mean,
when generosity-talk is talked,
are roused,
angered,
upset,
made obstinate;
they show temper,
ill-will and sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive no achieving of generosity in themselves
and they get no joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the mean generosity-talk is ill talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is insight-talk
to the lack-brain
ill talk?

Monks, the lack-brain,
when insight-talk is talked,
are roused,
angered,
upset,

made obstinate;
they show temper,
ill-will and sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive no achieving of insight in themselves
and they get no joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the lack-brain
insight-talk is ill talk.

Verily, monks, to these five persons
talk is ill talk
when the appropriate person is confronted.

Monks, to five persons
talk is good talk
when the appropriate person is confronted.

Of what five?

Monks, to the faithful
faith-talk is good talk;
to the virtuous
virtue-talk is good talk;
to the learned
learned-talk is good talk;
to the generous
generosity-talk is good talk;
to the insightful
insight-talk is good talk.

§

And wherefore, monks, is faith-talk to the faithful
good talk?

Monks, the faithful,
when faith-talk is talked,
are not roused,
not angered,
not upset,
not made obstinate;
they do not show temper,
ill-will or sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive achieving of faith in themselves and they get joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the faithful faith-talk is good talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is virtue-talk to the virtuous
good talk?

Monks, the virtuous,
when virtue-talk is talked,
are not roused,
not angered,

not upset,
not made obstinate;
they do not show temper,
ill-will or sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive achieving of virtue in themselves
and they get joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the virtuous virtue-talk is good talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is learned-talk to the learned
good talk?

Monks, the learned,
when learned-talk is talked,
are not roused,
not angered,
not upset,
not made obstinate;
they do not show temper,
ill-will or sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive achieving of learning in themselves
and they get joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the learned learned-talk is good talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is generosity-talk
to the generous
good talk?

Monks, the generous,
when generosity-talk is talked,
are not roused,
not angered,
not upset,
not made obstinate;
they do not show temper,
ill-will or sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive achieving of generosity in themselves
and they get joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the generous generosity-talk is good talk.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is insight-talk
to the insightful
good talk?

Monks, the insightful,
when insight-talk is talked,
are not roused,
not angered,
not upset,
not made obstinate;
they do not show temper,
ill-will or sulkiness.

And why?

They perceive achieving of insight in themselves
and they get joy and gladness therefrom.

Therefore to the insightful insight-talk is good talk.

Verily, monks, to these five persons
talk is good talk
when the appropriate person is confronted.

---

[1] Puggalaṃ puggalaṃ upanidhdya. Comy. taṃ taṃ pnggalaṃ upanikkhipitvā, saklchiṃ katvā.

[2] Duppaññassa, one without insight.

[3] This is stock; Cf. D. iii, 159; A. i, 124; J. iv, 22.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 158

Sārajja Suttaṃ

The Fearful[1] Heart

---

[135]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, possessed of five qualities
a monk becomes of a fearful heart.

Of what five?

Herein, monks, a monk is without faith,
without virtue,
of little learning,
indolent
and lacks insight.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five qualities
a monk becomes of a fearful heart.

§

Monks, possessed of five qualities
a monk becomes confident.

What five?

Herein, monks, a monk has faith,
virtue,
much learning,
aroused energy
and has insight.

Verily, monks, possessed of these five qualities
a monk becomes confident.

---

[1] Cf. above, § 101.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 159

Udāyī Suttaṃ

The Venerable Udāyin

---

[135]

Thus have I heard:

Once, while the Exalted One was dwelling near Kosambī in Ghosita Park, the venerable Udāyin,[1] surrounded by a great gathering of laymen, sat teaching Dhamma.

Now the venerable Ānanda saw the venerable Udāyin so [136] seated, teaching,
and thereat went to the Exalted One,
saluted
and sat down at one side.

So seated,
he said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, the venerable Udāyin, surrounded by a great gathering, teaches Dhamma.'

(And the Exalted One said:)

'Verily, Ānanda, not easy is it to teach Dhamma to others.

In teaching others Dhamma, Ānanda make[2] five things stand up within you, then teach others Dhamma.

What five?

Teach others Dhamma, thinking:

I will talk a talk on the gradual;[3]

teach others Dhamma, thinking:

I will talk a talk with the way[4] in view;

teach others Dhamma, thinking:

I will talk a talk out of kindliness;[5]

teach others Dhamma, thinking:

I will talk a talk not as a means for gain;[6]

teach others Dhamma, thinking:

I will talk a talk not to my own hurt nor to others.

Verily, Ānanda,
not easy is it to teach Dhamma to others.

In teaching others Dhamma, Ānanda,
make these five things stand up within you,
then teach others Dhamma.'

---

[1] Comy. does not indicate which Udāyin this is; see Brethr. 288.

[2] Upaṭṭhāpetvā, a double causative: make these things stand to (attention); so at D. ii, 141 of sati, mindfulness, when women are about!

[3] Anupubbikathaṃ. That is the gradual advancement. Comy. by way of giving, virtue, heaven and the Way.

[4] Pariyāyaṃ. Comy. of whatsoever is good, showing the cause (kāraṇaṃ idha pariyāyo).

[5] Anuddayataṃ paṭicca; see above, § 144 n.

[6] Āmis'antaro.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
16. Saddhamma Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVI: Saddhamma

Sutta 160

Duppaṭi-Vinodaya Suttaṃ

Hard to Make a Push Against[1]

---

[136]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five surges[2] are hard to make a push against.

What five?

The passion-surge is hard to make a push against;
so too is the ill-will-surge,
the infatuation-surge,
the ostentation-surge,[3]
the surge of vagrant[4] thoughts is hard to make a push against.

Verily, monks, these are the five surges hard to make a push against.

---

[1] Dubbinodaya and duppaṭivinodaya, the causative of du-ppaṭi-vi-√nud.

[2] 'Surge' is free for uppanna; 'uprisen thing.'

[3] Paṭibhāna. Comy. kalhetu-kamyatā vuccati.

[4] Gamika-cittaṃ. Comy. is silent.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVII: Malice

Sutta 161

Paṭhama Āghāta-Paṭivinaya Suttaṃ

The Putting Away of Malice (a)

---

[137]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

2. 'Monks, there are these five ways of putting away malice[1]
whereby all malice arisen in a monk
ought to be put away.

What five?

Monks, in whatsoever person malice is engendered,
in him amity ought to be made to become more.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

■

"Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in him pity ought to be made to become more.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

▪

"Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in him poise ought to be made to become more.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

▪

Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in that man[2] unmindfulness,
inattention to it,
ought to be brought about.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

▪

Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in that man the fact that he is of his own making ought to be fixed in his mind;
and he should think:

'This,[3] reverend sir,
is of one's own making,
the heir to deeds,
deeds are the matrix,
deeds are the kin,
deeds are the foundation;
whatever one does,
good or bad,
one will become heir to that.'

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

Verily, monks, these are the five ways of putting away malice
whereby all malice arisen in a monk
ought to be put away.'

---

[1] Āghāta-paṭivinayā. Comy. glosses: vūpasamenti; the sutta is partly quoted at Vism. trsl. 345; for other sets see D. iii, 262; A. iv, 408; v, 151. Cf. Ephesians iv, 31. It is curious that, from the first three ways muditā 'happiness' the third of the four brahmavihāras, should be omitted. In S. Nipāta, 73, 'poise' is omitted and vimutti substituted.

[2] Asati amana-sikaro āpajjitabbo. Comy. like a person hidden by a wall, etc., and does not appear.

[3] Cf. above, § 57.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVII: Malice

Sutta 162

Dutiya Āghāta-Paṭivinaya Suttaṃ

The Putting Away of Malice (b)

---

[137]

Thus have I heard:[ed1]

The Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied, and the Exalted One said:

'Monks, there are these five ways of putting away malice
whereby all malice arisen in a monk
ought to be put away.

What five?

Monks, in whatsoever person malice is engendered,
in him amity ought to be made to become more.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

'Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in him pity ought to be made to become more.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

'Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in him poise ought to be made to become more.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in that man unmindfulness,
inattention to it,
ought to be brought about.

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

Monks, in whomsoever malice is engendered,
in that man the fact that he is of his own making
ought to be fixed in his mind;
and he should think:

'This, reverend sir,
is of one's own making,
the heir to deeds,
deeds are the matrix,
deeds are the kin,
deeds are the foundation;
whatever one does,
good or bad,
one will become heir to that.'

In this way malice in him ought to be put away.

Verily, monks, these are the five ways of putting away malice
whereby all malice arisen in a monk
ought to be put away.'

Then said the venerable Sāriputta, addressing the monks:

'Reverend sirs!'

'Reverend sir,' they replied;
and he said:

'Reverend sirs, there are these five[1] ways of putting away malice whereby all malice arisen in a monk
ought to be put away.

What five?

[138] There is the case, reverend sirs,
of the person whose ways are impure in deed,
but not in word —
in such a person, sirs,
malice ought to be put away.

▪

There is the case, reverend sirs,
of the person whose ways are impure in word,
but pure in deed —
in such a person, sirs,
malice ought to be put away.

▪

There is the case, reverend sirs,
of the person whose ways are impure
both in deed and word,
yet from time to time
obtains mental clarity,
mental calm —

in such a person, sirs,
malice ought to be put away.

▪

There is the case, reverend sirs,
of the person whose ways are likewise impure;
but obtains no such clarity and calm —
in such a person, sirs,
malice ought to be put away.

▪

There is the case, reverend sirs,
of the person whose ways are pure
both in deed and word
and who obtains mental clarity,
mental calm —
in such a person, sirs,
malice ought to be put away.

§

Now of him whose ways are impure in deed,
but not in word —
how in him
ought malice to be put away?

Suppose, sirs, a monk, who robes himself in dust-heap rags, were to see a rag in the carriage-way;
he would hold on[2] to it with his left foot and spread it out with his right and take

and make use[3] of the best of it and go his ways.

Just so, sirs,
of one whose ways are impure in deed,
but pure in word:
the ways of deeds that may be impure ought not at that time to be thought on;
let him think at that time
on the ways that may be pure.

In this way in him
ought malice to be put away.

▪

And of him whose ways are impure in word, but pure in deed —
how in him
ought malice to be put away?

Suppose, sirs, a man, tortured by heat,
by heat forspent,
wearied,
craving
and thirsty,[4] were to come to a pond overgrown with mossy slime[5]
and water plants;
he would plunge into that pond, scattering with both hands the moss and plants
hither and thither,
and cup[6] his hands
and drink
and go his ways.

Just so, sirs,
of one whose ways are impure in word,
but pure in deed:
the ways of words
that may be impure
ought not then to be thought on;
let him think then
on the ways that may be pure.

In this way in him
ought malice to be put away.

▪

[139] And of him whose ways are impure
both in deed and word,
yet from time to time
obtains mental clarity,
mental calm —
how in him ought malice to be put away?

Suppose, sirs, a man,
tortured by heat,
by heat forspent,
wearied,
craving
and thirsty,
were to come upon a puddle
in a cow's footprint;[7]
he might think:

Here's a cow's footprint puddle,
but if I drink of it by hand or cup,
I shall stir and churn[8] it up and make it unfit to drink;
what if,

crouched on all fours,[9]
I were to lie and sup[10]
as a cow sups
and then go my ways? —

and he does so.

Just so, sirs,
of one whose ways are impure
both in deed and word,
yet from time to time
obtains mental clarity,
mental calm:
neither the ways of deeds
that may be impure
nor the ways of words
that may be impure
ought to be thought on then,
but the mental clarity,
the mental calm,
that he obtains from time to time, let him think then just on that.

In this way in him
ought malice to be put away.

▪

And of him whose ways are impure
both in deed and word,
but obtains no such clarity and calm —
how in him ought malice to be put away?

Suppose, sirs, a sick and ailing man, grievously ill,[11]
were to go along the highway —

it might be with no village near ahead or near behind —
unable to get proper food,
to get proper medicine,
to get proper attention,
to get a guide[12]
to some village boundary;
and suppose another man,
also going along the road,
were to see him;
verily it[13] might raise pity in that man,
raise compassion,
raise commiseration,
so that he might say to himself:

Alas for this man!

He ought to have proper food, proper medicine,
proper attention;
he ought to have a guide to some village.

Wherefore?

Lest he suffer even here wasting and destruction.

Just so, sirs, of one whose ways are impure, who obtains no mental clarity,
mental calm:
in such a person verily pity ought to arise,
compassion ought to arise, commiseration ought to arise,
so that he say to himself:

Alas for this venerable sir!

He should [140] give up bad habits in deed
and make good habits become more,
give up bad habits in word
and make good habits become more,
give up bad habits in thought
and make good habits become more.

Wherefore?

Lest this venerable sir,
on the breaking up of the body,
after death,
arise in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

In this way in him
ought malice to be put away.

▪

And of him whose ways are pure
both in deed and word
and who obtains mental clarity,
mental calm —
how in him
ought malice to be put away?

Suppose, sirs, a man,
tortured by heat,
by heat forspent,
wearied,
craving
and thirsty,
were to come to a pool[14]

clear,
sweet,
cool,
limpid,
a lovely resting-place,[15]
shaded by all manner of trees;
he would plunge into that pool,
bathe and drink,
and coming out,
would sit
and lie there
in the shade of the trees.

Just so, sirs,
of one whose ways are both pure
in deed and word,
who from time to time
obtains mental clarity,
mental calm:
the ways of deeds
that may be pure at that time,
the ways of words
that may be pure at that time, let him think on them then;
and the mental clarity,
the mental calm,
that he obtains
from time to time,
let him verily think on that then.

In this way in him
ought malice to be put away.

Reverend sirs,
when a person comes to be calm throughout,[16]
the mind becomes calm.

Verily, sirs, these are the five ways of putting away malice
whereby all malice arisen in a monk
ought to be put away.'

---

[1] Quoted at SnA. 10.

[2] Niggahetvā. Comy. glosses: akkamitvā.

[3] Paripācetva. Comy. luñchtivā, to pull out.

[4] This is a stock phrase; see M. ii, 74; S. ii, 110; cf. D. ii, 266.

[5] Sevāla-paṇaka-pariyonaddhā. Comy. sevālena ca udaka-pappaṭakena ca paṭicchannā; sevala = slimy, in Skt. Cf. below V, § 193.

[6] Añjalinā pivitvā. P.E.D. s.v. observes that añjali only occurs in stock phrases referring to salutations.

[7] Cf. A. iv, 102.

[8] Khobhessāmi, lolessāmi. Comy. cālessāmi, ākulaṃ karissāmi.

[9] Catukuṇḍiko. Comy. jānuhi ca hatthehi ca bhūmiyaṃ patiifṭṭhānena.

[10] Go-pītakaṃ pivitvā. Comy. gāviyo viyo mukhena ākaḍḍhanto pivitvā.

[11] Cf. below V, § 194.

[12] Gam'anta-nāyakaṃ.

[13] So.

[14] Cf. M. i, 76, 283; below V, § 194; the phrases are stock; see D. ii, 129; Vin. iii, 108; Ud. 83.

[15] Our text supatiṭṭhā, which I follow; however, S.e., Comy. and other texts -tittha, Skt. tīrtha; our Comy. sama-, level; DA. ii, 569 and UdA. 403 sundara-, good; Dial. trsl. easy to get down into.

[16] Samanta-pāsādikaṃ ... āgamma cittaṃ pasīdati; on the first word see G.S. i, 19 but here we have three derivatives of √sad: pāsādika, pasāda and pasīdati. On āgamma see K.S. i, 114, 318. [Ed.? 318 is the Index of Pali words.]

[ed1] The following section is AN 5.161 which I suggest is to be taken as the Nidana for this sutta. I further suggest that this pattern should be considered wherever a Nidana is missing and the sutta begins "Then ..." or "There, then..."

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter VII: Thoughts

Sutta 163

Alaṃ-Sākaccha Suttaṃ

Talk

---

[140]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sirs.'

'Reverend sir,' they replied;
and Sāriputta said:

"Monks, endowed with five qualities,
a monk may well talk
to his fellows in the godly life.

What five?

Monks, herein a monk
in himself has achieved virtue
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of virtue;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved concentration
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of concentration;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved insight
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved emancipation
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved the knowledge and insight of emancipation
and explains a question raised
by a talk on the achieving of knowledge and insight of emancipation.

Verily, monks, endowed with these five qualities,
a monk may well talk
to his fellows in the godly life.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter VII: Thoughts

Sutta 164

Alaṃ-Sājīva Suttaṃ

An Example

---

[141]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sirs.'

'Reverend sir,' they replied;
and Sāriputta said:

"Monks, a monk endowed with five qualities,
is a fitting example
to his fellows in the godly life.

What five?

Monks, herein a monk
in himself has achieved virtue
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of virtue;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved concentration
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of concentration;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved insight
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved emancipation
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of insight;

▪

So too, a monk in himself has achieved the knowledge and insight of emancipation
and explains a question prepared
by a talk on the achieving of knowledge and insight of emancipation.

Verily, monks, endowed with these five qualities,
is a fitting example
to his fellows in the godly life.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVII: Malice

Sutta 165

Pañha-Pucchā Suttaṃ

On Asking Questions

---

[141]

Thus have I heard:[ed1]

Once the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sirs.'

'Reverend sir,' they replied;
and Sāriputta said:

'All who question another are in five states (of mind) or one of them.

What five?

One being foolish and blind questions another;[1]

▪

one filled with evil desires and covetousness
questions another;

▪

one contemptuously
questions another;

▪

one seeking knowledge
questions another;

▪

or one questions another uncertainly,[2] thinking:

If questioned by me
he explain rightly,
it is well;
but if questioned by me
he explain not rightly,
I will explain to him.

Reverend sirs, all who question another are in these five states or in one of them.

§

Reverend sirs, when I question another, verily I am thus minded:

If questioned by me
he explain rightly,
it is well;
but if questioned by me

he explain not rightly,
I will explain to him.'

---

[1] Cf. above, § 93.

[2] Pakuppanto, from √kup, to he agitated; cf. M. i, 187, of the elements; F. Dial. trsl., wroth. Cf. 1 Corinthians ix, 26, but just in the opposite way: 'I therefore so run, not as uncertainly.'

[ed1] I suggest the Nidana for this sutta is AN 5.161 + AN 5.162 + AN 5.163 + AN 5.164. I further suggest that this pattern should be considered wherever a Nidana is missing and the sutta begins "Then ..." or "There, then..."

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVII: Malice

Sutta 166

Nirodha Suttaṃ

Ending

---

[141]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sirs.'

'Reverend sir,' they replied;
and Sāriputta said:

'Herein, sirs, a monk,
who has achieved virtue,
achieved concentration,
achieved insight,
may both completely[1] enter
the ending of perception and feeling
and may emerge therefrom —
this is so.

If here among visible things
he make[2] not the gain of gnosis,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on[3] solid food

and arise in a mind-pictured[4] body, provided he enter
and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling —
this is so.'

▪

When he had thus spoken,
the venerable Udāyin said
to the venerable Sāriputta:

'This is not so, venerable Sāriputta,
[142] nor happens it,
that should a monk enter and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body —
it is not so!'

▪

A second time Sāriputta said:

'Herein, sirs, a monk,
who has achieved virtue,
achieved concentration,
achieved insight,
may both completely enter
the ending of perception and feeling
and may emerge therefrom —
this is so.

If here among visible things
he make not the gain of gnosis,
he will surely go beyond

the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body,
provided he enter
and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling —
this is so.'

▪

A second time, when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Udāyin said
to the venerable Sāriputta:

'This is not so, venerable Sāriputta,
nor happens it,
that should a monk enter and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body —
it is not so!'

▪

A third time Sāriputta said:

'Herein, sirs, a monk,
who has achieved virtue,
achieved concentration,
achieved insight,
may both completely enter
the ending of perception and feeling
and may emerge therefrom —
this is so.

If here among visible things
he make not the gain of gnosis,

he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body,
provided he enter
and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling —
this is so.'

■

A third time, when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Udāyin said
to the venerable Sāriputta:

'This is not so, venerable Sāriputta,
nor happens it,
that should a monk enter and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body —
it is not so!'

§

Then thought the venerable Sāriputta:

"Even unto a third time the venerable Udāyin[5] cries against me
and no monk supports me;
what if I were to go to the Exalted One?"

And he went to where the Exalted One was and saluted him and sat down at one side.

So seated, the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks:

'Herein, sirs, a monk,
who has achieved virtue,
achieved concentration,
achieved insight,
may both completely enter
the ending of perception and feeling
and may emerge therefrom —
this is so.

If here among visible things
he make not the gain of gnosis,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body,
provided he enter
and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling —
this is so.'

▪

And when he had thus spoken, the venerable Udāyin replied:

'This is not so, venerable Sāriputta,
nor happens it,
that should a monk enter and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body[6] —
it is not so!'

▪

A second time Sāriputta said:

'Herein, sirs, a monk,
who has achieved virtue,
achieved concentration,
achieved insight,
may both completely enter
the ending of perception and feeling
and may emerge therefrom —
this is so.

If here among visible things
he make not the gain of gnosis,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body,
provided he enter
and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling —
this is so.'

▪

A second time, when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Udāyin said
to the venerable Sāriputta:

'This is not so, venerable Sāriputta,
nor happens it,
that should a monk enter and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body —
it is not so!'

▪

A third time Sāriputta said:

'Herein, sirs, a monk,
who has achieved virtue,
achieved concentration,
achieved insight,
may both completely enter
the ending of perception and feeling
and may emerge therefrom —
this is so.

If here among visible things
he make not the gain of gnosis,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body,
provided he enter
and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling —
this is so.'

▪

A third time, when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Udāyin said
to the venerable Sāriputta:

'This is not so, venerable Sāriputta,
nor happens it,
that should a monk enter and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body —
it is not so!'

§

Then thought the venerable Sāriputta:

'Verily, before the face of the Exalted One, even unto a third time
the venerable Udāyin cries against me
and no monk supports me;
I had best be silent.'

And so the venerable Sāriputta was silent.

§

Then the Exalted One addressed the venerable Udāyin and said;

'But who, do you hold,[7] Udāyin, has a mind-pictured body?'

[143]'Those devas, lord, who are formless, perception-made.'

'Why think thou, Udāyin, that the word of a witless fool like thee is just the thing to declare?

Then the Exalted One addressed the Venerable Ānanda thus:

'Is it possible,[8] Ānanda, that you can look on with indifference at an elder monk being vexed?

Verily, Ānanda,
compassion grows not from (suffering) an elder monk to be vexed.'

Then the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

'Herein, monks, a monk,
who has achieved virtue,
achieved concentration,
achieved insight,
may both completely enter
the ending of perception and feeling
and may emerge therefrom —
this is so.

If here among visible things
he make not the gain of gnosis,
he will surely go beyond
the deva community that feed on solid food
and arise in a mind-pictured body,
provided he enter
and emerge
from the ending of perception and feeling —
this is so.'

Thus spoke the Exalted One;
and when he had thus spoken,
the Well-Gone arose and entered the dwelling.

§

Now not long after the departure of the Exalted One, the venerable Ānanda went up to the venerable Upavāna[9] and said to him:

'Just now, venerable Upavāna, some (monks) were vexing the elder monk and we never protested unto them.

Therefore wonder not, venerable sir, should the Exalted One,
after coming from seclusion,
bring[10] the matter up and[11] relate the whole affair to the venerable Upavāna.

Already even fearfulness[12] is come upon us.'

§

And in the evening,
after coming from seclusion,
the Exalted One went to the service hall, and, when come, he sat down on [144] the seat that was ready.

So seated, he said to the venerable Upavāna:

'Having how many qualities, Upavāna, does an elder among his fellows in the godly life become pious,
loved,
respected
and what he ought to become?

'Lord, having five[13] qualities,
an elder among his fellows in the godly life
becomes pious,
loved,
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

Lord, herein he is virtuous,
abides restrained by the restraint of the Obligations,
is perfect in conduct and habit,
sees peril in the smallest fault,
accepts the training
and trains himself accordantly;

▪

he is learned,
with mind retentive and well stored;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and in letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory.;

▪

he has a pleasant voice,
a good enunciation,
is urbane in speech,
distinct,
free from hoarseness
and informative;

▪

at will,
easily and without trouble,
he attains to the four states of musing,

which bring comfort
both here and now,
transcending thought;

▪

by destroying the cankers
he enters and abides in the emancipation of the heart
and of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
and this state he knows and realizes for himself,
even in this life.

Verily, lord, having these five qualities
an elder among his fellows in the godly life
becomes pious,
loved,
respected
and what he ought to become.'

§

'Well (said), well (said), Upavāna!

It is even (as you say): having these five qualities
an elder among his fellows in the godly life
becomes pious,
loved,
respected
and what he ought to become.

If these five qualities are not completely found in an elder, will his fellows in the godly life respect,

honour,
reverence
and venerate him
for his broken teeth,
his grey hairs,
his wrinkled skin?[14]

But verily, Upavāna, when these five things are found in an elder, then his fellows in the godly life respect him,
honour,
reverence
and venerate him.'

---

[1] Sam-.

[2] Ārādheti, caus. of √rādh; Cf. S. v, 285; K.S. v, 254.

[3] Kabaliṅkārāhāra-bhakkha. Comy. kāmāvacara, as elsewhere.

[4] Manomayaṃ kāyaṃ. See above, § 44.

[5] Comy. Lāla or foolish Udāyin.

[6] See the Apaṇṇaka-sutta, M. i, 140 [Ed: But? the latter is neither the Apaṇṇaka-sutta, nor does it have anything like what follows]: there are these propositions: there are no formless conditions at all and mind-made devas have form; or, there are formless conditions and perception-made devas are formless. Then there is no ending of becoming entirely and perception-made devas are formless; or, there is ending of becoming entirely and Nibbāna here among these visible conditions (can be won). Our Comy. observes that Udāyin hearing 'Mind-pictured' disagreed, thinking 'It ought to be among the formless.'

[7] Paccesi; see Dial. i, 252 n. and above, § 144.

[8] Atthi nāma. Comy. amarisan'atthe nipāto. Ayaṃ h'ettha attho; Ānanda, tumhe theraṃ bhikkhuṃ vihesiyamānaṃ ajjhupekkhatha? Na vo 'etāṃ marisāmi,' na 'adhivāsemī' ti. (Think not 'I suffer this man,' nor 'I bear with him.') Marisati and a-marisana are rare words and not in our Pāli Dicts. The Skt. root must be √mrish. I cannot find any other derivatives used in Pāli.

[9] The B.'s personal attendant; see K.S. i, 220; Brethr. 140. The Comy. observes that the B. addressed Ānanda because he was, as it were, the store-keeper of Dhamma.

[10] Udāhareyya, from √hr.

[11] Yathā. Comy. kāraṇa-vacanaṃ.

[12] Sārajjaṃ; see above, § 101.

[13] See above, § 87, for details; the text here abbreviates.

[14] Cf. D. ii, 305; M. i, 49; S. ii, 2; DhS. trsl. 195 n.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVII: Malice

Sutta 167

Codanā Suttaṃ

Exhortation

---

[144]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sirs.'

'Reverend sir,' they replied;
and Sāriputta said:

Reverend sirs, when he that exhorts[1] wishes to exhort another, let him make five things stand up[2] within him,
then let him exhort another.

What five?

I[3] will speak timely,
not untimely;
I will speak about what has happened,[4]
not what has not;
I will speak with gentleness, [145] not harshness;
I will speak about the Goal,[5]

not about what is not the Goal;
I will speak with mind of amity,
not of ill-will.

Reverend sirs, when he that exhorts wishes to exhort another, let him make himself make these five things stand up within him,
then let him exhort another.

§

Maybe,[6] sirs, I see some monk being exhorted untimely, moved[7] not timely;
exhorted about what has not happened,
moved not about what has happened;
exhorted in a harsh way,
moved not with gentleness;
exhorted about what is not the Goal,
not about the Goal;
exhorted in ill-will,
moved not in amity.

▪

In him not exhorted according to Dhamma, on five scores
no remorse ought to be set up;[8]

(let him think:)

"This venerable sir has exhorted untimely, not timely —
'there's no need for remorse in thee' —;[9]

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted about what has not happened, not what has —
'there's no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted harshly, not with gentleness —
'there's no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted on what is not about the Goal,
not on what is about the Goal —
'there's no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted in ill-will,
not in amity —
'there's no need for remorse in thee.'

Reverend sirs, in him not exhorted according to Dhamma, on these five scores no remorse ought to be set up.

§

Reverend sirs, in him that exhorts not according to Dhamma,
on five scores ought remorse to be set up;

(let him think:)

Untimely is the good man exhorted by thee —
'there is need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

he is exhorted by thee about what has not happened,
not what has —
'there is need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

is harshly exhorted by thee, not gently —
'there is need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

is exhorted by thee on what is not about the Goal,
not on what is about the Goal —
'there is need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

is exhorted by thee in ill-will,
not in amity —
'there is need for remorse in thee.'

"Reverend sirs, in him that exhorts not according to [146] Dhamma, on these five scores ought remorse to be set up.

Wherefore?

To the end that no monk should think one ought to be exhorted about what has not happened.

§

'Or I see, sirs, some monk being timely exhorted, moved not untimely;
exhorted about what has happened,
moved about what has happened;
exhorted with gentleness, moved not in a harsh way;
exhorted about what is the Goal,
not about what is not the Goal;
exhorted in amity,
moved not in ill-will.

▪

In him, thus exhorted according to Dhamma,
on five scores ought remorse to be set up.

(let him think:)

"This venerable sir has exhorted timely,
not untimely —
'there's need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted about what has happened, not what has not happened —
'there's need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted with gentleness, not harshly —
'there's need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted on what is about the Goal,
not on what is not about the Goal —
'there's need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

This venerable sir has exhorted in amity,
not in ill-will —
'there's need for remorse in thee' —;

Reverend sirs, in him exhorted according to Dhamma,
on these five scores remorse ought to be set up.

§

Reverend sirs, in him that exhorts according to Dhamma,
on five scores ought no remorse to be set up;

(let him think:)

Timely is the good man exhorted by thee —
'there is no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

he is exhorted by thee about what has happened, not what has not happened —
'there is no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

is gently exhorted by thee, not harshly —
'there is no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

is exhorted by thee on what is about the Goal,
not on what is not about the Goal —
'there is no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

is exhorted by thee in amity,
not in ill-will—
'there is no need for remorse in thee' —;

▪

"Reverend sirs, in him that exhorts according to Dhamma, on these five scores ought no remorse to be set up.

Wherefore?

To the end that a monk should think one ought to be exhorted about what has happened.

§

There ought to be a support, sirs, in two things
for a person exhorted,
to wit:
in truth
and in the immovable.[10]

▪

If others exhort me,
whether timely or not;
about what has happened or not;
gently or harshly;
about the Goal or not;
in amity or in ill-will,
I should find support in two things:
in truth
and in the immovable.

▪

If I know:

"It is in me,
this Dhamma,"
thinking:
"It is,"
I should declare it,
saying:
"Wholly found in me is this Dhamma."

▪

But if I know:

"It is not in me,
this Dhamma,"
thinking:
"It is not,"
I should declare that,
saying:
"Wholly not found in me is this Dhamma."

§

(The Exalted One said;[11])

'And while you are thus speaking, Sāriputta,
I suppose some foolish men have not the talent to grasp[12] the matter?'

'Lord,[13] those persons,
unbelievers,
who — as a means of living,[14]
not of faith —
go forth from the home to the homeless life —
impostors,
frauds,
deceivers,[15]
who are vainly puffed up,[16] [147] shifty praters of loose talk,
unguarded as to their sense-doors,
eating without moderation,
unwatchful,
who seek not true recluseship,
are without zeal in training,
luxurious,
lax,
the first to move in backsliding,[17]
who cast aside the yoke of the secluded life,
indolent,
low in energy,
of mindfulness unforgetful [sic],
not self-possessed,
with uncomposed and wandering minds,
dull lack-wits —
they, while I speak in this way,
have not the talent to grasp the matter.

▪

But those clansmen, lord, who of faith
go forth from the home to the homeless life —
no impostors, frauds, deceivers,
not vainly puffed up,
not shifty praters of loose talk,
who are guarded as to sense-doors,
moderate in eating,
watchful,
who seek true recluseship,
are zealous in training,
neither luxurious nor lax,
who cast aside the yoke of backsliding,
move first to seclusion,
with energy bestir themselves,
are resolved,
stand up in mindfulness,
self-possessed,
composed,
one-pointed,
wise,
no lack-wits —
they, while I speak in this way,
have the talent to grasp the matter.'

▪

'Let be those unbelieving
who — as a means of living,
not of faith —
go forth from the home to the homeless life —
impostors,
frauds,
deceivers,

who are vainly puffed up,
shifty praters of loose talk,
unguarded as to their sense-doors,
eating without moderation,
unwatchful,
who seek not true recluseship,
are without zeal in training,
luxurious,
lax,
the first to move in backsliding,
who cast aside the yoke of the secluded life,
indolent,
low in energy,
of mindfulness forgetful,
not self-possessed,
with uncomposed and wandering minds,
dull lack-wits —
who, while you speak in this way,
have not the talent to grasp the matter Sāriputta;
speak thou to them who of faith
go forth from the home to the homeless life —
no impostors, frauds, deceivers,
not vainly puffed up,
not shifty praters of loose talk,
who are guarded as to sense-doors,
moderate in eating,
watchful,
who seek true recluseship,
are zealous in training,
neither luxurious nor lax,
who cast aside the yoke of backsliding,
move first to seclusion,
with energy bestir themselves,
are resolved,
stand up in mindfulness,
self-possessed,

composed,
one-pointed,
wise,
no lack-wits —
who, while you speak in this way,
have the talent to grasp the matter.

■

Admonish thy fellows in the godly life, Sāriputta, instruct them;[18]
and think then:

When I have stirred them up from what is not Saddhamma,
I will make them stand fast in Saddhamma.[19]

Verily, Sāriputta, train thyself in this way.'

---

[1] Cf. St. Paul to the Romans (xii, 8) and elsewhere.

[2] The text upaṭṭhapetvā, but S.e. upaṭṭhāpetvā; see above, $ 159 n.

[3] Cf. the whole sutta with Vin. ii, 249 ff. (S.B.E. xx, 317); the five recur at D. iii, 236; M. i, 126; A. v, 81. Cf. below V, § 198.

[4] Bhūtena, about what has become. Comy. tacchena, sabhāvena.

[5] Attha-saṅhitena, from √dhā. Comy. glosses: upetena. See 'First Utterance,' Vin. i, p. 10; Mrs. Rhys Davids' Manual, p. 112.

[6] idha.

[7] Kupitaṃ, as in the Acts: [Ed.: 21:30] 'all the city was moved.'

[8] Upadahātabbo, also from √dhā, Comy. uppādetabbo.

[9] Lit. 'enough for thee of remorse!' an idiom characteristic of sayings recorded elsewhere as of the Founder.

[10] This recurs at Vin. ii, 251; Rhys Davids' trsl.: in truth and in freedom from anger; but see above, § 95 n., and Tr. P.D. s.v. akuppa.

[11] This may be inferred from bhante in the reply.

[12] Na padakkhiṇaṃ gaṅhanti; Cf. above, § 156.

[13] Cf. the whole passage with M. iii, 6.

[14] Jivik'atthā; see the use at UdA. 205.

[15] Keṭubhino. P.E.D. observes, deriv. unknown, but I suppose it is connected with the Sk. kaitava.

[16] Unnalā uddhatā Cf. Colossions ii, 18: 'Let no man beguile you ... vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind.' Cf. also A. i, 70; S. i, 61; v, 269.

[17] Okkctmana.

[18] Anusāsa

[19] Cf. above, § 88.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVII: Malice

Sutta 168

Sīla Suttaṃ

Virtue

---

[147]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sirs.'

'Reverend sir,' they replied;
and Sāriputta said:

'Reverend sirs, for the wicked,
who lack virtue,
right concentration is perforce destroyed;

—

when right concentration is not,
true knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks right concentration;

—

when true knowledge and insight are not,
aversion and dispassion
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks true knowledge and insight;

—

when aversion and dispassion are not,
emancipated knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks aversion and dispassion.

▪

Reverend sirs, just as in the case of a tree,
devoid of branches and leaves,
its shoots come not to maturity,
nor its bark,
nor its sapwood,
nor its core;
even so in the wicked,
who lack virtue,
right concentration is perforce destroyed;
when right concentration is not,
true knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks right concentration;
when true knowledge and insight are not,
aversion and dispassion
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks true knowledge and insight;
when aversion and dispassion are not,
emancipated knowledge and insight
are perforce destroyed
in one who lacks aversion and dispassion.

§

Reverend sirs, in the moral and virtuous, right concentration perforce thrives;

—

when there is right concentration,
true knowledge and insight
perforce thrive
in one who has right concentration;

—

when there is true knowledge and insight,
aversion and dispassion
perforce thrive
in one who has true knowledge and insight;

—

when there is aversion and dispassion,
emancipated knowledge and insight
perforce thrive
in one who has aversion and dispassion.

▪

Reverend sirs, just as in the case of a tree,
possessing branches and leaves,
its shoots,
its bark,
sapwood

and core
come to maturity;
even so in the moral and virtuous
right concentration perforce thrives;
when there is right concentration,
true knowledge and insight
perforce thrive
in one who has right concentration;
when there is true knowledge and insight,
aversion and dispassion
perforce thrive
in one who has true knowledge and insight;
when there is aversion and dispassion,
emancipated knowledge and insight
perforce thrive
in one who has aversion and dispassion.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

Sutta 169

Khippa-Nisanti Suttaṃ

Coming to Know

---

[147]

Thus have I heard:

At Sāvatthī.

Now the venerable Ānanda went up to the venerable Sāriputta and greeted him and,
after exchanging the words of customary greetings,
sat down at one side.

So seated,
the venerable Ānanda said to the venerable Sāriputta:

'How far, reverend Sāriputta, does a monk come speedily to [148] know[1] aptness in things[2] so that his grasp is a good grasp;
so that he grasps much
and forgets not what he has grasped?'

'I know[3] the venerable Ānanda has heard much;
let the venerable Ānanda throw light upon the matter.'

'Well then, reverend Sāriputta, hearken and give heed
and I will speak."

▪

'Very well, reverend sir,' replied the venerable Sāriputta;
and the venerable Ānanda said:

'Take the case, reverend Sāriputta, of a monk who is apt at meanings,
apt at Dhamma,
apt at letters,[4]
apt at language,[4]
apt at orderly sequence[5] - thus far, reverend Sāriputta, a monk comes speedily to know aptness in things and his grasp is a good grasp, he grasps much
and forgets not what he has grasped.'

▪

'It is marvellous, sir, it is wonderful,
how well this has been put by the venerable Ānanda!

We hold the venerable Ānanda is possessed of these five things:
the venerable Ānanda is apt at meanings,
apt at Dhamma,
apt at letters,
apt at language
and apt at orderly sequence.'[6]

---

[1] Khippa-nisanti. Comy. Khippaṃ nisāmayati, upadhāreti.

[2] Kusalesu dhammesu. Dict. meanings of kusala are: fitting, healthy, well, skilful, expert; it is used both adjectivally and as a noun; see Mrs. Rhys Davids' remarks, DhS. trsl. lxxxii. Comy. cheko; ad A. iv, 206, of dhammesu: the skandhas, elements, spheres, etc.

[3] Kho.

[4] Vyañjana and nirutti. There is a suggestion in these five terms of literary preoccupation; an attention to the formulated mandates, rather than to their meaning, that argues a later compilation.

[5] Pubbāpara-. Comy. of attha, of dhamma, of pada, of akkhara, and of anusandhi.

[6] Quoted at UdA. 11.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVII. Āghāta Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVII: Malice

Sutta 170

Bhaddaji Suttaṃ

Bhaddaji

---

[148]

Thus have I heard:

'Once, while the venerable Ānanda was dwelling near Kosambī in Ghosita Park, the venerable Bhaddaji[1] came up and greeted him and,
after exchanging the words of customary greetings,
sat down at one side.

So seated,
the venerable Ānanda said to the venerable Bhaddaji:

'Good Bhaddaji,
what is the best of sights,
what the best [149] of sounds,
what, the beat of joys,
what the best of conscious states,
and what is the best of becomings?'

■

'There is Brahmā, sir,
who is overcomer,
by none overcome,[2]
he is the seer of whatever may be,
with power and dominion;
who sees him
of the Brahmās,
that is the best of sights.

▪

There are the devas of radiant splendour, in whom joy flows and overflows, who ever and again utter a cry of:

"Joy, oh joy!"

who hears that sound —
it is the best of sounds.

▪

There are the all-lustrous devas, rejoicing just in quiet,[3] who feel joy —
that is the best of joys.

▪

There are the devas
who go to the sphere of nothingness — theirs is the best of conscious states.

▪

There are the devas
who go to the sphere of neither consciousness nor unconsciousness — theirs is the best of becomings' (i.e. lives, or worlds).

§

'This is but the way of the many folk,
this (talk) of the venerable Bhaddaji.'

'The venerable Ānanda has heard much;
let the venerable Ānanda throw light upon the matter!'.

'Very well, reverend Bhaddaji, listen and pay attention
and I will speak."

'Yes, sir,' he replied;
and the venerable Ānanda said:

'When,[4] while one looks,
the cankers are destroyed —
that is the best of sights.

▪

When, while one listens,
the cankers are destroyed —
that is the best of sounds.

▪

When, while one rejoices,
the cankers are destroyed —
that is the best of joys.

■

When, while one is conscious,
the cankers are destroyed —
that is the best of conscious states.

■

When, while one has become,[5]
the cankers are destroyed —
that is the best of becomings.'

---

[1] See Brethr. 129.

[2] This is stock; Cf. D. i, 18; iii, 135; A. ii, 24; It. 15: abhibhū anabhibhūto, sometimes used of the Tathāgata.

[3] Te santaṃ yeva tusitā. S.e. reads te santaññ'eva sukhitā.

[4] Anantarā, no interval, immediately. Comy. anantarā yeva!

[5] Yathā bhūtassa.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 171

Sārajja Suttaṃ

Fearfulness

---

[150]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Jeta Grove at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, following five things,[1]
fearfulness comes upon a layman.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
is given over to lusts of the flesh,
lies
and takes spirituous liquors that cause indolence.

Monks, following these five things,
fearfulness comes upon a layman.'

"Monks, following five things,
confidence comes upon a layman.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusts of the flesh,
lies
and he abstains from taking spirituous liquors that cause indolence.

Monks, following these five things,
confidence comes upon a layman.'

---

[1] Dhammā

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 172

Visārada Suttaṃ

Confidence

---

[150]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Jeta Grove at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, following five things,
a layman lives the home-life without confidence.

What five?'

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
is given over to lusts of the flesh,
lies
and takes spirituous liquors that cause indolence.

Monks, following these five things,
a layman lives the home-life without confidence.'

§

"Monks, following five things,
a layman lives the home-life with confidence.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusts of the flesh,
lies
and he abstains from taking spirituous liquors that cause indolence.

Monks, following these five things,
a layman lives the home-life with confidence.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 173

Niraya Suttaṃ

Hell

---

[150]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Jeta Grove at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

Monks, following five,
a layman is duly thrown into hell.

What five?'

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
is given over to lusts of the flesh,
lies
and takes spirituous liquors that cause indolence.

Monks, following these five things,
a layman is duly thrown into hell.'

§

"Monks, following five things,
a layman is duly thrown into heaven.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusts of the flesh,
lies
and he abstains from taking spirituous liquors that cause indolence.

Monks, following these five things,
a layman is duly thrown into heaven.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 174

Vera Suttaṃ

Hatred

---

[150]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Jeta Grove at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now the householder, Anāthapiṇḍika, visited the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side;
and the Exalted One spoke to the householder, thus seated,
and said:

'Householder, he who has not got rid of the five dread hatreds
is called virtueless
and arises in hell.

What five?

Taking life,
taking what is not given,
fleshly lusts,

lying
and indulgence in spirituous liquor that cause indolence.

Verily, he who has not got rid
of these five dread hatreds
is called virtueless
and arises in hell.

▪

'Householder, he who has got rid
of the five dread hatreds
is called virtuous
and arises in heaven.

What five?

Taking life,
taking what is not given,
fleshly lusts,
lying
and indulgence in spirituous liquor that cause indolence.

Verily, he who has not got rid
of these five dread hatreds
is called virtuous
and arises in heaven.

§

[151] When, householder, the taker of life,[1]
by reason of his taking life, breeds dread hatred in this world
or breeds dread hatred hereafter,
he feels in the mind
pain and grief;
but he who abstains from taking life breeds no dread hatred in this world,
nor none hereafter,
nor does he feel in his mind
pain and grief;
thus that dread hatred
for him who abstains from taking life is suppressed.

▪

When, householder, the taker of what is not given by reason of his taking what is not given,
breeds dread hatred in this world
or breeds dread hatred hereafter,
he feels in the mind
pain and grief;
but he who abstains from taking what is not given
breeds no dread hatred in this world,
nor none hereafter,
nor does he feel in his mind
pain and grief;
thus that dread hatred
for him who abstains from taking what is not given is suppressed.

▪

When, householder, one of fleshy lusts
by reason of his fleshy lusts,

breeds dread hatred in this world
or breeds dread hatred hereafter,
he feels in the mind
pain and grief;
but he who abstains from fleshy lusts
breeds no dread hatred in this world,
nor none hereafter,
nor does he feel in his mind
pain and grief;
thus that dread hatred
for him who abstains from fleshy lusts
is suppressed.

▪

When, householder, the liar
by reason of his lies,
breeds dread hatred in this world
or breeds dread hatred hereafter,
he feels in the mind
pain and grief;
but he who abstains from lying
breeds no dread hatred in this world,
nor none hereafter,
nor does he feel in his mind
pain and grief;
thus that dread hatred
for him who abstains from lying is suppressed.

▪

When, householder, one indulging in spirituous liquors
that cause indolence,
by reason of his indulging in spirituous liquors,
breeds dread hatred in this world

or breeds dread hatred hereafter,
he feels in the mind
pain and grief;
but he who abstains from indulging in spirituous liquors breeds no dread hatred in this world,
nor none hereafter,
nor does he feel in his mind
pain and grief;
thus that dread hatred
for him who abstains from indulging in spirituous liquors
is suppressed.

Who[2] in this world brings life to death, speaks lies,
Goes to another's wife, takes things not given,
Who drinks strong drink — these five hate-breeding things
Not giving up — immoral he, 'tis said:
When body fails that fool is born in hell.
But whoso ne'er takes life, nor speaks lies,
Nor goes to another's wife, takes things not given,
Nor drinks strong drink, is not addict of these Hate-breeding things — moral is he, 'tis said:
At death that wise man will arise in heaven.'

---

[1] This recurs at A. iv, 406; v. 183; with v.l. and S.e. we should insert pāṇātipātī.

[2] The first three lines of our text recur at Dhp. 246-7; S.e. reads atipāteti. Cf. S. iv, 343.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 175

Upāsaka Caṇḍāla Suttaṃ

The Outcast[1]

---

[151]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

'Monks; pursuing five things,
a layman is the outcast of laymen,
the dirt of laymen,
the off-scouring of laymen.

What five?

He is without faith,
without morals,
is a diviner by curious ceremonies,[2]
he believes in luck,[3] not deeds, he seeks outside [152] (the Order)

for a gift-worthy person
and there first offers service.

Monks, pursuing these five things,
a layman is the outcast of laymen,
the dirt,
the off-scouring of laymen.

§

Monks, pursuing five things,
a layman is the jewel of laymen,
the lily of laymen,
the lotus of laymen.

What five?

He has faith,
is moral,
is not a diviner by curious ceremonies,
he believes in deeds, not luck,
he seeks no outside (the Order)
for a gift-worthy person or there first offers service.

Monks, pursuing five things,
a layman is the jewel of laymen,
the lily of laymen,
the lotus of laymen.

[1] Caṇḍāla.

[2] Kotūhala-maṅgaiika; kotūhala has been confused with kolāhala (and halākala): tumult; see P.E.D. s.v.; Q. of M. i, 143 (the native gloss is near the meaning); Maṅgalajātaka, i, 371 explains the meaning; our Comy. iminā idaṃ bhavissatī -ti evaṃ pavattattā kotūhala-saṅkhātena diṭṭha-suta-muta-maṅgalena samannāgato (cf. J. i, 374); the Sk. is kautūhala, curiosity, interest; kautaka-maṅgala, a solemn ceremony, a festival, and so, no doubt, noise (cf. UdA. 156: kotūhalahāsa). See also M. i, 265: vata-kotūhala-maṅgalāni; below VI, § 93.

[3] Maṅgalaṃ pacceti no kammaṃ. Comy. maṅgalaṃ oloketi.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 176

Pīti Suttaṃ

Zest[1]

---

[152]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
in Jeta Grove at Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then the householder, Anāthapiṇḍika, with about five hundred lay-disciples around him,
came to the Exalted One,
saluted
and sat down at one side;
and the Exalted One spoke to him,
so seated, and said:

'Verily, householder,
you have served the Order of monks
with gifts of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicine for sickness —

but you must not be satisfied
just by the thought:

"We have served the Order
with gifts of the requisites."

▪

Wherefore, householder,
train yourself thus:

Come now,[2]
let us, from time to time,
enter and abide in
the zest that comes of seclusion.

Verily, train yourself thus, householder.'

▪

And when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Sāriputta said to the Exalted One:

'It is marvellous, lord,
it is wonderful,
how well the Exalted One has spoken:

"Verily, householder,
you have served the Order of monks
with gifts of the requisites:
the robe,
alms,
lodging
and medicine for sickness —
but you must not be satisfied
just by the thought:

'We have served the Order
with gifts of the requisites.'

Wherefore, householder,
train yourself thus:

'Come now,
let us, from time to time,
enter and abide in
the zest that comes of seclusion.'

Verily, train yourself thus, householder."

§

Lord, what time the Ariyan disciple
enters and abides
in the zest that comes of seclusion,
for him five things become not:

for him in that time
the pain and grief
that follow lust
become not;

▪

the pleasure and gratification
that follow lust
become not;

▪

the pain and grief
that follow evil
become not;

▪

the pleasure and gratification
that follow evil
become not;[3]

▪

for him in that time
the pain and grief
that follow doing good
become not.

Lord, what time the Ariyan disciple
enters and abides
in the zest that comes of seclusion,
for him these five things become not.'

§

'Well done, well done, Sāriputta!

Sāriputta, what time the Ariyan disciple
enters and abides
in the zest that comes of seclusion,
for him five things become not:

for him in that time
the pain and grief
that follow lust
become not;

▪

the pleasure and gratification
that follow lust
become not;

▪

the pain and grief
that follow evil
become not;

▪

the pleasure and gratification
that follow evil
become not;

▪

for him in that time
the pain and grief
that follow doing good
become not.

[153] What time, Sāriputta, the Ariyan disciple
enters and abides
in the zest that comes of seclusion,
for him in that time
these five things become not.'

[1] Pīti.

[2] Kinti. Comy. kena nāma upāyena.

[3] Comy. observes that he may go forth to shoot a deer or pig and miss, and so become depressed; or he may hit and kill and be glad.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
Upāsaka vaggo

Sutta 177

Vaṇijjā Suttaṃ

Trades

---

[153]

'Monks, these five trades ought not to be plied by a lay-disciple.

What five?

Trade in weapons,
trade in human beings,
trade in flesh,[1]
trade in spirits
and trade in poison.

Verily, monks, these five trades ought not to be plied by a lay-disciple.'

---

[1] Comy. he breeds and sells pigs, deer, etc.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 178

Rāja Suttaṃ

Rajahs

---

[153]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

'Now what think you, monks,
has this thing been seen
and heard of by you:

"This man gave up taking life
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from taking life,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)[1]
or wreak their wrath[2] upon him"?'

'No, indeed, lord, it has not.'

'Well, monks, neither by us
has this thing been seen
and heard of that:

"This man gave up taking life
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from taking life,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?

▪

But if folk give evidence against him
of just some evil deed as this:

"This man has caused the death of a woman or man,"

then rajahs,
because he has taken life,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth from the country
or wreak their wrath upon him —
has such a thing been seen
and heard by by you?'

'Lord, by us
this thing has been both seen and heard of;
yea, and we shall hear of it again.'

§

'Now what think you, monks,
has this thing been seen
and heard of by you:
and heard of by you:

"This man gave up taking what is not given
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from what is not given,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?'

'No, indeed, lord, it has not.'

'Well, monks, neither by us
has this thing been seen
and heard of that:

"This man gave up taking what is not given
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from taking what is not given,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?

▪

But if folk give evidence against him
of just some evil deed as this:

"This man stealthily took from village or forest what was not given [154] him," —

then rajahs,
because he has taken what is not given,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
ör thrust him forth from the country
or wreak their wrath upon him —
has such a thing been seen
and heard by by you?'

'Lord, by us
this thing has been both seen and heard of;
yea, and we shall hear of it again.'

§

'Now what think you, monks,
has this thing been seen
and heard of by you:
and heard of by you:

"This man gave up lusts of the flesh
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from lusts of the flesh,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?'

'No, indeed, lord, it has not.'

'Well, monks, neither by us
has this thing been seen
and heard of that:

"This man gave up lusts of the flesh
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from lusts of the flesh,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?

▪

But if folk give evidence against him
of just some evil deed as this:

"This man had intercourse with others' wives or others' maidens," —

then rajahs,
because he misbehaved because of lusts of the flesh,[ed1]
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
ör thrust him forth from the country
or wreak their wrath upon him —
has such a thing been seen
and heard by by you?'

'Lord, by us
this thing has been both seen and heard of;
yea, and we shall hear of it again.'

§

'Now what think you, monks,
has this thing been seen
and heard of by you:

"This man gave up lying
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from lying,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?'

'No, indeed, lord, it has not.'

'Well, monks, neither by us
has this thing been seen
and heard of that:

"This man gave up lying
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from lying,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?

▪

But if folk give evidence against him
of just some evil deed as this:

"This man by lying has broken up the home[3] of this householder or that householder's son," —

then rajahs,
because he has lied,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
ör thrust him forth from the country
or wreak their wrath upon him —
has such a thing been seen
and heard by by you?'

'Lord, by us
this thing has been both seen and heard of;
yea, and we shall hear of it again.'

§

'Now what think you, monks,
has this thing been seen
and heard of by you:
and heard of by you:

"This man gave up drinking all spirituous liquors
that cause indolence
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from drinking all spirituous liquors
that cause indolence,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?'

'No, indeed, lord, it has not.'

'Well, monks, neither by us
has this thing been seen
and heard of that:

"This man gave up drinking all spirituous liquors
that cause indolence
and abstains therefrom;
and rajahs, because he abstains from drinking all spirituous liquors
that cause indolence,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
or thrust him forth (from the country)
or wreak their wrath upon him"?

▪

But if folk give evidence against him
of just some evil deed as this:

"This man given over to drinking indolence-causing liquors, has taken the life of some woman or man;
given over to drinking indolence-causing liquors,
has stealthily taken from village or forest
what was not given him;
given over to drinking indolence-causing liquors,
has had intercourse with others' wives or others' maidens;
given over to drinking indolence-causing liquors,
has by lying broken up the home of this householder
or that householder's son," —

then rajahs,
because he was given over to drinking indolence-causing liquors,
seize and slay him
or put him in fetters
ör thrust him forth from the country

or wreak their wrath upon him —
has such a thing been seen
and heard by by you?'

'Lord, by us
this thing has been both seen and heard of;
yea, and we shall hear of it again.'

---

[1] So Comy.

[2] Yathāpaccayaṃ vā karoti. Comy. yathādhippayo yathājjhasayaṃ karoti.

[3] Attha; Cf. S. iv, 347, where this recurs.

[ed1] Hare has abridged this whole section and his translation of kāmesu micchācāraṃ, (literally 'misbehaviour (or contrary or misbegotten, or low carrying-on) in sense-pleasures') does not fit in this case so I have modified it with the addition of 'misbehaved because of".

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 179

Gihī Suttaṃ

The Home-Man

---

[155]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī.

Now the householder Anāthapiṇḍika, surrounded by about five hundred lay disciples, visited the Exalted One and,
after saluting,
sat down at one side.

Then the Exalted One addressed the venerable Sāriputta
and said;

'Sāriputta, any white-frocked home-man[1] you know,
who acts controlled[2]
in the five steps of the training
and obtains at will,
easily and without difficulty
the four[3] very purposive abodes of ease,
here amid things seen,
may, should he desire,
declare just the (state of) self

by the self,
saying:

"Destroyed' is hell for me;
destroyed is animal-rebirth;
destroyed is the realm of ghosts;
destroyed for me is the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss;
I am he who has won to the Stream,
not subject to any falling away,
sure
and bound for enlightenment."

§

He acts controlled
in what five steps of the training?

Herein, Sāriputta, the Ariyan disciple
abstains from taking life,
from taking what is not given,
from fleshly lusts,
from lying
and from drinking spirituous liquors
that cause indolence.

He acts controlled
in these five steps of the training.

▪

What are the four abodes of ease,
very purposive,
he obtains at will,
easily and without difficulty
here amid things seen?

Herein, Sāriputta, the Ariyan disciple
has unwavering faith in the Buddha:

Of a truth he is that,
the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
walking in knowledge,
well gone,
wise in the ways of the worlds,
with none greater,
tamer of tamable men,
teacher of devas and men, Buddha,
lord.

This is the first
very purposive abode of ease,
won, here amid things seen,
by purifying impure thought,
by cleansing unclean thought.

-○-

Again, Sāriputta, the Ariyan disciple has unwavering faith in Dhamma;

Well declared by the Exalted One is Dhamma,
one to be seen here and now,
not for other times,
bidding one [156] come and see,

a guide to be understood by wise men,
each for himself.

This is the second
very purposive abode of ease,
won, here amid things seen,
by purifying impure thought,
by cleansing unclean thought.

-○-

He has unwavering faith in the Order;

Well trained
is the Exalted One's Order of disciples;
trained in uprightness
is the Exalted One's Oder of disciples; trained in method
is the Exalted One's Order of disciples;
trained in the way of right[4]
is the Exalted One's Order of disciples —
the four pairs of men,
the eight male persons —
this is the Exalted One's Order of disciples, worthy of offerings,
worthy of oblations,
worthy of gifts,
meet to be reverently saluted,
a field for merit,
none greater in the world.

This is the third
very purposive abode of ease,
won, here amid things seen,
by purifying impure thought,
by cleansing unclean thought.

-○-

Moreover, Sāriputta, the Ariyan disciple is possessed of virtues beloved by Ariyans —
whole,
unbroken,
untarnished,
without blemish,
bringing freedom,
praised by wise men,
incorrupt,
conducive to concentration.

This is the fourth
very purposive abode of ease,
won, here amid things seen,
by purifying impure thought,
by cleansing unclean thought.

These are the four abodes of ease,
very purposive,
he obtains at will,
easily and without difficulty
here amid things seen

§

Sāriputta, any white-frocked home-man you know,
who acts controlled
in these five steps of the training
and obtains at will,
easily and without difficulty,

these four very purposive abodes of ease,
here amid things seen,
may, should he desire,
declare just the (state of) self
by the self
and say:

Destroyed is hell for me;
destroyed is animal-rebirth;
destroyed is the realm of ghosts;
destroyed for me is the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss;
I am he who has won to the Stream,
not subject to any falling away,
sure and bound for enlightenment.

§

Seeing hell's fearfulness, shun wickedness;
Wise men shun that, firm set in Ariyan Dhamma.
Not harming aught that breathes where progress is;[5]
Lie not, nor knowingly touch things ungiven;
live gladly with thine own, leave[6] others' wives; [157] No man should drink strong drink[7] that dulls the thought;
Mind[8] thou the Buddha, think on Dhamma oft;
With fair and harmless thoughts make thyself fit
For heaven. For him who merit's meed would win,[9]
With gift in Dhamma[10] furnished, that gift,
First giv'n to godly men, will richly ripen.
Here I'll make known such men, list Sāriputta!
Mid[11] cows, black, white, red, tawny, dapple, dove,

Is found the well-tamed ox, strong beast of burden,
Gentle and swift to move, on whom they set
The load and yoke whatever his hue may be;
So among men of noble, brahman, low,
Or serf breeds, outcasts, aboriginals,
Is found the well-tamed, pious, modest man,
Just,[12] virtuous, truth-speaking, done with birth
And death, accomplished in the godly life,
With load put down, done what was to be done.
Rid of the cankers, yea and gone beyond
All states, not clinging, cool — lo! in that field
Of faultless men a gift will richly ripen.
The witless, loreless[13] fools, all-ignorant,
Give gifts outside that field nor serve good men.
But they, with faith firm rooted in the Well-gone,
Who serve the good—wise men and by wise men Held wise[14] — go to the deva-realm, or here
Are born within some clan;[15] and as wise men In gradual course attain Nibbāna's bliss.'

---

[1] Gihin as opposed to the yellow-robed pabbajita, one gone forth.

[2] Saṃvuta-kammanta, Comy. pihita-.

[3] Cf. A. iv, 405 ff.; D. ii, 93; S. v, 357; the four are called the mirror of Dhamma. Cf. Gotama the Man, pp. 169, 229.

[4] Sāmīci.

[5] Vijjamāne parakkame.

[6] Ārame; S.e. and v.l. nārame; at A. iv, 137 we have āramati in the same sense; P.E.D. omits, but see ārata, ārati; the root is √ram, meaning to set at rest, to be at ease, to delight in.

[7] Merayaṃ vāruṇiṃ. Comy. catubbidhaṃ merayaṃ, pañcavidhañ ca suraṃ; vāruṇī is a Jātaka word and does not seem to recur in the four Nikāyas; it is odd that the Commentaries do not connect it with Varuṇa's daughter, the Hindu goddess of spirituous liquor; see J. i, 251.

[8] Cf. Romans viii, 5.

[9] Jigiṃsato.

[10] Deyya-dhamma: a Dhamma-ly gift, but see P.E.D. s.v.

[11] From here onwards recurs at A. i, 162, see G.S. i, 145; Comy. refers to AA. ii, 258.

[12] This line of the text recurs above, § 42.

[13] Assutāvino

[14] Sappaññe dhīrasammate.

[15] In spite of the text above. Comy. omits the śudras in explaining the clans or families.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XVIII. Upāsaka Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XVIII: The Lay-Disciple

Sutta 180

Gavesī Suttaṃ

Gavesin, the Seeker

---

[158]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One with a great following of monks walked a walk among the Kosalans.

And as the Exalted One went along the highway he saw a place where grew a big grove of sal trees;
and seeing it there,
he moved down from the road and went towards it
and made his way among the trees;
and at a certain place
he smiled.[1]

▪

Now the venerable Ānanda thought:

'What cause now,
what reason[2]
moved the Exalted One to show a smile?

Not for nothing
do Tathāgatas smile.'

And the venerable Ānanda asked him concerning the matter:

'What cause now,
what reason
moved the Exalted One to show a smile?

Not for nothing
do Tathāgatas smile.'

■

(Then said the Exalted One:)

'At this place, Ānanda, in olden times
there was a rich and flourishing city thronged with many people;
and by the city, Ānanda, there dwelt the Exalted One, Kassapa,[3]
arahant,
fully enlightened;
and Gavesin was a lay-disciple
of the Exalted One, Kassapa;
but he kept not the moral precepts.

-○-

Now because of Gavesin
there were about five hundred who testified[4]
and were stirred to discipleship, but they kept not the moral precepts.

Thought he:

"I have greatly served these five hundred lay-disciples,
being the first to move and bestir myself;
yet I keep not the moral precepts
nor do these five hundred others.

This is a levelling of levels,[5] leaving no whit of a more.

Come now.

I'm for something more!"

So Gavesin went up to the five hundred
and said:

"Know, good sirs,[6]
from today
that I keep the moral precepts."

Then, Ānanda, those five hundred
thought to themselves:

"Verily, Master Gavesin has greatly served us,
being first to move and bestir himself,
and this same Master Gavesin will [159] now keep the moral precepts —
why then not we too?"[7]

Then went those five hundred lay-disciples to Gavesin
and told him that they too henceforth
would keep the moral precepts.

▪

Again thought Gavesin:

"I have greatly served these five hundred lay-disciples,
being the first to move and bestir myself;
being the first to keep the moral precepts,
and now they too keep the moral precepts,
but I do not follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,[8]
giving up sex-life,
common among men,[9]
nor do these five hundred others.

This is a levelling of levels,
leaving no whit of a more.

Come now.

I'm for something more!"

So Gavesin went up to the five hundred
and said:

"Know, good sirs,
from today,
I follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men."

Then, Ānanda, those five hundred
thought to themselves:

"Verily, Master Gavesin has greatly served us,
being first to move and bestir himself,
being first to keep the moral precepts

and now we too keep the moral precepts
and this same Master Gavesin will follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,—
why then not we too?"

Then went those five hundred lay-disciples to Gavesin
and told him that they too
henceforth
would follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men.

▪

Again thought Gavesin:

"I have greatly served these five hundred lay-disciples,
being the first to move and bestir myself;
being the first to keep the moral precepts,
and now they too keep the moral precepts,
being the first to follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
and now they too follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
but I am not a one-mealer

abstaining from night-eating,
giving up eating at wrong times
nor are these five hundred others.

This is a levelling of levels,
leaving no whit of a more.

Come now.

I'm for something more!"

So Gavesin went up to the five hundred
and said:

"Know, good sirs,
from today,
I am a one-mealer
abstaining from night-eating,
giving up eating at wrong times."

Then, Ānanda, those five hundred
thought to themselves:

"Verily, Master Gavesin has greatly served us,
being first to move and bestir himself,
being first to keep the moral precepts,
and now we too keep the moral precepts,
being first to follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
and now we too follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
and this same Master Gavesin
will become a one-mealer

abstaining from night-eating,
giving up eating at wrong times,—
why then not we too?"

Then went those five hundred lay-disciples to Gavesin
and told him that they too
henceforth
would become one-mealers
abstaining from night-eating,
giving up eating at wrong times.

▪

Now the lay-disciple Gavesin considered thus:

"I have greatly served these five hundred lay-disciples,
being the first to move and bestir myself;
being the first to keep the moral precepts,
and now they too keep the moral precepts,
being the first to follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
and now they too follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
being the first to become a one-mealer
abstaining from night-eating,
giving up eating at wrong times
and now they too have become one-mealers
abstaining from night-eating,
giving up eating at wrong times.

This is a levelling of levels,
leaving no whit of a more.

Come now.

I'm for something more!"

And, Ānanda,
the lay-disciple Gavesin went to the Exalted One, Kassapa,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
and, having come,
said to him:

"Lord, grant that I may go forth beside the Exalted One;
grant me full acceptance!"[10] —
and Gavesin,
the lay-disciple,
obtained permission to go forth beside Kassapa,
the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened;
he obtained full acceptance.

▪

[160] Now not long after his acceptance, Ānanda, Gavesin the monk,
living alone,
withdrawn,
zealous,
ardent,
resolved,
entered into and abode in
that unsurpassed goal of the godly life,

here among visible things, realizing it by his own knowledge —
that goal
for the good of which clansmen's sons rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life —
and he declared:

Destroyed is birth,
lived is the godly life,
done is the task,
there is no more this-ness!

Thereafter, Ānanda,
the monk Gavesin
was numbered among the arahants.

▪

Then thought those five hundred lay-disciples:

"Verily, Master Gavesin has greatly served us,
being first to move and bestir himself,
being first to keep the moral precepts
and now we too keep the moral precepts,
being first to follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
and now we too follow the celibate's life,
the life remote,
giving up sex-life,
common among men,
being the first to become a one-mealer
abstaining from night-eating,

giving up eating at wrong times,
and now we too are one-mealers
abstaining from night-eating,
giving up eating at wrong times,
and this same Master Gavesin
now has had his hair and beard shaved off, donned the yellow robe,
and goes forth from the home to the homeless life;
why then not we too?"

And those five hundred lay-disciples, Ānanda, went and begged the Exalted One, Kassapa,
saying:

"Grant, lord, that we may go forth beside the Exalted One;
grant us full acceptance!"
- and those five hundred obtained permission to go forth beside Kassapa,
the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened;
obtained full acceptance.

▪

Then thought the monk Gavesin:

"I, verily, can obtain this unsurpassed bliss of liberation
at will,
easily,
and without difficulty;
would that these five hundred monks could obtain this bliss
at will,

easily,
and without difficulty!"

Ānanda, those five hundred monks abode alone,
withdrawn,
zealous,
ardent,
resolved;
and, not long after,
entered into and abode in
that unsurpassed goal of the godly life,
here among visible things, realizing it by their own knowledge —
that goal
for the good of which clansmen's sons rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life —
and declared:

Destroyed is birth,
lived is the godly life,
done is the task,
there is no more this-ness!

▪

Thus verily, Ānanda,
those five hundred monks
with Gavesin at their head, in striving from higher things to higher,
from strength to strength,
came to realize a liberation,
above which there is no higher.

▪

Wherefore, Ānanda,
train yourselves in this way:

From higher to higher,
from strength to strength,[11]
we will [161] strive and will come to realize the liberation,
above which there is no higher.

Verily thus, Ānanda, train ye yourselves.'

---

[1] This setting recurs elsewhere; see M. ii, 45, 74; Cf. S. ii, 254; Vin. iii, 105. Comy. observes that in smiling the B. merely showed the tips of his teeth and laughed not as ordinary men who smack their bellies and say, Ho ho!

[2] Hetu paccayo.

[3] He who immediately preceded Gotama Buddha.

[4] Paṭidesitāni samādapitāni. Comy. Upasaka-bhāvaṃ paṭidesitāni samādapitāni saraṇesu patiṭṭhāpitāni; Cf. A. iv, 66.

[5] Icc'etaṃ sama-samaṃ.

[6] Āyasmanto.

[7] The text reads kimaṅga pana mayaṃ, but with S.e. and Comy. we should read pana na.

[8] Brahmacārī ārācārī. Cf. A. iv, 249; D. i, 4; M. iii, 88. The text repeats all in full.

[9] Gāmadhanmā, lit. thing of the village, or, in India, where 'village' was more 'urban' than with us, 'thing of communal life.'

[10] Upasampadā; see below V, § 251.

[11] Uttaruttariṃ paṇītapaṇītaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 181

Āraññaka Suttaṃ

Forest-Gone[1]

---

[161]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are forest-gone.

What five?

One is forest-gone
out of folly and blindness;

-○-

one out of evil desires and longings;

-○-

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

-○-

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

-○-

and one is forest-gone
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who have gone to the forest,
he who has gone
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,
from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five forest-gone,
he who has gone
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

---

[1] Āraññaka, lit. forest-man.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 182

Paṃsu-Kūlika Suttaṃ

Rag-clad[ed1]

---

[161]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are rag-clad men.

What five?

One is rag-clad
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is rag-clad
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are rag-clad,
he who is rag-clad
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five rag-clad men,
he who is rag-clad
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Paṃsu-kūlika, lit. dust-pile-rag man. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 183

Rukkha-Mūlika Suttaṃ

Tree-Root Sitters[ed1]

---

[219]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are tree-root-sitting men.

What five?

One is a tree-root-sitter
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is a tree-root-sitter
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are tree-root-sitters,
he who is a tree-root-sitter
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five tree-root-sitters,
he who is a tree-root-sitter
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Rukkhamūlika, lit. tree-root man. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 183a

Piṇḍa-Pātika Suttaṃ

Alms-Round Only Men[ed1]

---

[161]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are alms-round only men.

What five?

One is an alms-round only man
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is an alms-round only man
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are alms-round only men,
he who is an alms-round only man
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five alms-round only men,
he who is an alms-round only man
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Piṇḍapātika, lit. alms-round man. Not included in the PTS collection. In the manner of the Hare translations of the other suttas in this chapter: AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 184

Sosānika Suttaṃ

Graveyard Haunters[ed1]

---

[161]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are graveyard haunting men.

What five?

One is a graveyard haunter
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is a graveyard haunter
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are graveyard haunters,
he who is a graveyard haunter
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five graveyard haunters,
he who is a graveyard haunter
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Sosānika, lit. graveyard man. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 185

Abbhokāsika Suttaṃ

Open-Air Lodgers[ed1]

---

[161]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are open-air lodgers.

What five?

One is an open-air lodger
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is an open-air lodger
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are open-air lodgers,
he who is an open-air lodger
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five open-air lodgers,
he who is an open-air lodger
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Abbhokāsika, lit. open-air man. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 186

Nesajjika Suttaṃ

One-Place Sitters[ed1]

---

[161]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are one-place [162] sitters.

What five?

One is a sitting-man
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is a sitting-man
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are sitting-men,
he who is a sitting-man
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five sitting-men,
he who is a sitting-man
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Nesajjika, lit. sitting man. This is mistranslated by Hare. It is not that this person sits in one place, but that he does not lie down to sleep but sleeps in the sitting posture. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 187

Yathā-Santhatika Suttaṃ

Any-Bed Men[ed1]

---

[162]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are any-bed men.

What five?

One is an any-bed man
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is an any-bed man
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are any-bed men,
he who is an any-bed man
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five any-bed men,
he who is an any-bed man
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Yathā-santhatika, lit. whatever bed man. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 188

Ekā-Sanika Suttaṃ

Lone Sitters[ed1]

---

[162]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are lone sitters.

What five?

One is a lone sitter
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is a lone sitter
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are lone sitters,
he who is a lone sitter
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five lone sitters,
he who is a lone sitter
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Ekā-sanika, Hare has 'lone sitter'; Bhk. Bodhi has 'one-session-practice' and defines it as being one who eats his food in one sitting, when he gets up the meal is finished; P.E.D. has 'one who keeps to himself'. Both of these are recommended practices that are the hallmarks of extra effort. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 189

Khalu-Pacchābhattika Suttaṃ

Never-After-Time-Eaters[ed1]

---

[162]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are never-after-time-eaters.

What five?

One is a never-after-time-eater
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is a never-after-time-eater
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are never-after-time-eaters,
he who is a never-after-time-eater
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five never-after-time-eaters,
he who is a never-after-time-eater
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Khalupacchābhattika, Bhk. Bodhi has 'later-food-refuser's practice' and defines it as being one who refuses any food that may be offered and made available after one has started one's meal. The Pe Maung Tin translation of the Visuddhimagga has this as the 'after-food refuser' and defines that as one who refuses any food after his first meal which leaves open the possibility of additional food being placed in the bowl during that first meal. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XIX. Araññа Vaggo

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XIX: The Forest

Sutta 190

Patta-Piṇḍika Suttaṃ

From-One-Bowl-Eaters[ed1]

---

[162]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five are from-one-bowl eaters.

What five?

One is a from-one-bowl eater
out of folly and blindness;

one out of evil desires and longings;

one foolish and mind-tossed;[2]

one at the thought:

"It is praised by Buddhas and their disciples";

and one is a from-one-bowl eater
just because his wants are little,
just for contentment,
just to mark[3] (his own faults),
just for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing.[4]

§

Verily, monks, of these five
who are from-one-bowl eaters,
he who is a from-one-bowl eater
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion,
just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.

▪

Monks, just[5] as from the cow comes milk,
from milk cream,
from cream butter,
from butter ghee,

from ghee the skim of ghee
there reckoned topmost;
even so, monks,
of these five from-one-bowl eaters,
he who is a from-one-bowl eater
just because his wants are little,
for contentment,
to mark (his own faults),
for seclusion
and just because it is the very thing —
he of the five
is topmost,
best,
foremost,
highest,
elect.'

[ed1] Patta-piṇḍika, hand-out bowl men. Hare has abridged this sutta down to it's title referencing AN 5.181. Except for this first one, which I have edited as called for by the change of subject, I have left the footnotes intact as they apply.

[2] Cf. above, § 93.

[3] Sallekha, from √likh; F. Dial. i, 10: 'purgation of evil'; Dial iii, 109: resigned';; but it is as in the Psalms (cxxx, 3): 'If thou shouldeet mark iniquities, who can stand?'

[4] Idam aṭṭhitaṃ, to S.e., and Comy. which explains: imāya kalyāṇāya paṭipattiyā attho etassa.

[5] This simile recurs at S. iii, 264; A. ii, 95; v, 182; Cf. J. vi, 206.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 191

Soṇa Suttaṃ

The Dog Simile

---

[162]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these five[1] ancient brāhman things are now seen in dogs,
but not in brāhmans.

What five?

Monks, in former times
brāhmans approached only a brāhmaṇī, never a non-brāhmaṇī;
now they go to brāhmaṇī
and non-brāhmaṇī alike.

Monks, today dogs go to dogs only,
never to other creatures.

This, monks, is the first ancient brāhman thing
now seen in dogs,
not in brāhmans.

▪

Monks, in former times
brāhmans approached a brāhmaṇī only in season,
never at other times;
now they go to a brāhmaṇī
both in and out of season.

Monks, today dogs go to dogs only in season,
never at other times.

This, monks, is the second ancient brāhman thing
now seen in dogs,
not in brāhmans.

▪

Monks, in former times
brāhmans neither bought nor sold a brāhmaṇī, but, consorting just where affection was mutual,
fostered concord;
now they both buy and sell brāhmaṇīs,
and consort where affection is mutual.

Monks, today dogs neither buy nor sell dogs, but consort just where affection is mutual and foster concord.

This, monks, is the third ancient brāhman thing
now seen in dogs,

not in brāhmans.

▪

Monks, in former times
brāhmans hoarded neither treasure,
grain,
silver
nor gold;
now they hoard treasure,
grain,
silver
and gold.

Monks, today dogs hoard neither treasure,
grain,
silver,
nor gold.

[163] This, monks, is the fourth ancient brāhman thing
now seen in dogs,
not in brāhmans.

▪

Monks, in former times
brāhmans sought food for the evening meal[2]
in the evening,
for the morning meal
in the morning;
now, after cramming their bellies to the uttermost,
they take away the remainder.

Monks, today dogs seek food for the evening meal
in the evening,
for the morning meal
in the morning.

This, monks, is the filth ancient brāhman thing
now seen in dogs,
not in brāhmans.

Verily, monks, these are the five ancient brāhman things
now seen in dogs,
but not in brāhmans.

---

[1] Cf. Sn. 290-1 for these brāhmaṇa-dhamma.

[2] Sāya-m-āsa, a Jātaka compound.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 192

Doṇa Suttaṃ

Brāhman Doṇa

---

[163]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī.

Now brāhman Doṇa[1] visited the Exalted One
and greeted him;
and after exchanging the customary words of greetings,
sat down at one side.

So seated,
brāhman Doṇa said to the Exalted One:

'I have heard it said, Master Gotama, that Master Gotama does not salute aged,
venerable brāhmans,
well stricken in years,
long on life's road,
grown old —
nor rise up for them,
nor offer them a seat.

Master Gotama, it is just so;
Master Gotama does not salute aged,
venerable brāhmans,
well stricken in years,
long on life's road,
grown old —
nor rise up for them,
nor offer them a seat.

This is not right, Master Gotama.'[2]

▪

'Do you not[3] profess to be a brāhman, Doṇa?

'If of anyone, Master Gotama,
in speaking rightly
it should be said:

"The brāhman is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations,
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach in point of birth;[4]
studious,
carrying the mantras in mind,
a past master in the three Vedas
with the indices and ritual,
in phonology too,
[164] and fifthly in the legends;
an expert in verse and grammar,
skilled in reading the marks of a great man,
in speculation on the universe"[5] —

to be sure
of me, Master Gotama,
in speaking rightly
that thing should be said;
for I, Master Gotama, am well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations,
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach in point of birth;
studious,
carrying the mantras in mind,
a past master in the three Vedas
with the indices and ritual,
in phonology too,
and fifthly in the legends;
an expert in verse and grammar,
skilled in reading the marks of a great man,
in speculation on the universe.'

▪

'Doṇa, those brāhman-sages of old,
mantra-makers,
mantra-sayers,
whose ancient collection of mantra verses,
hymns
and sayings,
brāhmans now ever hymn,
ever say,
ever word the word,
ever have the sayings said —
to wit:
Aṭṭaka
Vāmaka

Vāmadeva
Vessāmitta
Yamataggi
Aṅgīrasa
Bhāradvāja
Vāseṭṭha
Kassapa
and Bhagu[6] —
they these five brāhmans have declared:

the Brahma-like,[7]
the deva-like,
the bounded,
the breaker of bounds and,
fifthly, the brāhman-outcast.

Which of them, Doṇa,
are you?'

▪

'We know not of these five brāhmans, Master Gotama;
yet we know that we are brāhmans.

It were well for me
if Master Gotama would teach me Dhamma so that I may know of these five.'

▪

'Then listen, brāhman,
give heed
and I will speak!'

'Yes, sir,' replied he;
and the Exalted One said:

'And how, Doṇa,
becomes a brāhman
Brahma-like?

Take the case, Doṇa,
of a brāhman who is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations,
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach in point of birth —
he for eight and forty years[8]
leads the Brahma-life of virginity,[9]
applying himself to the mantras;[10]
then, completing that course,
he seeks the teacher's fee for teaching
according to Dhamma,
not non-Dhamma.

And what there is Dhamma, Doṇa?

Never as ploughman[11]
nor [165] trader
nor cowherd
nor bowman
nor rajah's man
nor by any craft
(to get his living),
but solely by going about for alms,
despising not the beggar's bowl.[12]

And he hands over the teacher's fee for teaching,
has his hair-beard shaved off,
dons the yellow robe
and goes forth from the home
to the homeless life.

▪

And thus gone forth,
he abides[13] in mind pervading with amity
one world quarter,
so a second,
a third,
a fourth,
then above,
below,
athwart,
everywhere,
the whole wide world he pervades
with thoughts of amity,
far-reaching,
expansive,
measureless,
without hatred or ill-will.

▪

He abides in mind pervading with pity
one world quarter,
so a second,
a third,
a fourth,
then above,
below,
athwart,
everywhere,
the whole wide world he pervades
with thoughts of pity,
far-reaching,
expansive,
measureless,
without hatred or ill-will.

▪

He abides in mind pervading with sympathy
one world quarter,
so a second,
a third,
a fourth,
then above,
below,
athwart,
everywhere,
the whole wide world he pervades
with thoughts of sympathy,
far-reaching,
expansive,
measureless,
without hatred or ill-will.

▪

He abides in mind pervading with poise
one world quarter,
so a second,
a third,
a fourth,
then above,
below,
athwart,
everywhere,
the whole wide world he pervades
with thoughts of poise,
far-reaching,
expansive,
measureless,
without hatred or ill-will.

And having made these four Brahma-abidings[14] become,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
he arises in the well-faring Brahma-world.

Thus, Doṇa,
a brāhman becomes Brahma-like.[15]

§

And how, Doṇa,
becomes a brāhman
deva-like?

Take the case, Doṇa, of a brāhman
who is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations,
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach in point of birth —
he for eight and forty years
leads the Brahma-life of virginity,
applying himself to the mantras;
then, completing that course,
he seeks the teacher's fee for teaching
according to Dhamma,
not non-Dhamma.

And what there is Dhamma, Doṇa?

Never as ploughman
nor trader
nor cowherd

nor bowman
nor rajah's man
nor by any craft
(to get his living),
but solely by going about for alms,
despising not the beggar's bowl.

And he hands over the teacher's fee for teaching,
and seeks a wife according to Dhamma,
not non-Dhamma.

And what there is Dhamma?

Not with one bought or sold,
but only with a brāhmaṇī on whom water has been poured.[16]

And he goes only to a brāhmaṇī,
not to the daughter of a noble,
low-caste man
or serf,
nor to the daughter of an outcast,
hunter,
bamboo- [166] worker,
cart-maker,
or aboriginal;[17]
nor goes to a woman, with child,
nor to one giving suck,
nor to one not in her season.

And wherefore, Doṇa —
goes not a brāhman
to one with child?

If he go,
the boy or girl

will surely be foully born[18]
therefore he goes not.

And wherefore goes he not
to one giving suck?

If he go,
the boy or girl
will surely be an unclean suckling;[19]
therefore he goes not.

And wherefore goes he not
to one not in her season?

If, Doṇa,
a brāhman go to one in her season,[20]
never for him
does the brāhmaṇī become a means for lust,
for sport,
for pleasure;
the brāhmaṇī is for the brāhman
just a means to beget offspring.

And when in wedlock[21]
he has begotten (a child),
he has his hair-beard shaved off,
dons the yellow robe
and goes forth from the home
to the homeless life.

And thus gone forth,
aloof from sensuous appetites,
aloof from evil ideas,
enters and abides in the first musing,
wherein applied and sustained thought works,

which is born of solitude
and is full of joy and ease;

suppressing applied and sustained thought,
he enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of joy and ease,
free from applied and sustained thought,
and there the mind becomes calm and one-pointed;

free from the zest for joy,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:

'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease;

by putting away ease and by putting away ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill.

And having made these four musings become,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
he arises in the well-faring heaven[22] world.

Thus Doṇa,
a brāhman becomes deva-like.

§

And how, Doṇa,
becomes a brāhman bounded?[23]

Take the case, Doṇa, of a brāhman
who is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations,
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach in point of birth —
he for eight and forty years
leads the Brahma-life of virginity,
applying himself to the mantras;
then, completing that course,
he seeks the teacher's fee for teaching
according to Dhamma,
not non-Dhamma.

And what there is Dhamma, Doṇa?

Never as ploughman
nor trader
nor cowherd
nor bowman
nor rajah's man
nor by any craft
(to get his living),
but solely by going about for alms,
despising not the beggar's bowl.

And he hands over the teacher's fee for teaching,
and seeks a wife according to Dhamma,
not non-Dhamma.

And what there is Dhamma?

Not with one bought or sold,
but only with a brāhmaṇī on whom water has been poured.

And he goes only to a brāhmaṇī,
not to the daughter of a noble,
low-caste man
or serf,
nor to the daughter of an outcast,
hunter,
bamboo-worker,
cart-maker,
or aboriginal;
nor goes to a woman, with child,
nor to one giving suck,
nor to one not in her season.

And wherefore, Doṇa —
goes not a brāhman
to one with child?

If he go,
the boy or girl
will surely be foully born
therefore he goes not.

And wherefore goes he not
to one giving suck?

If he go,
the boy or girl
will surely be an unclean suckling;
therefore he goes not.

And wherefore goes he not
to one not in her season?

If, Doṇa,
a brāhman go to one in her season,
never for him
does the brāhmaṇī become a means for lust,
for sport,
for pleasure;
the brāhmaṇī is for the brāhman
just a means to beget offspring.

And when in wedlock
he has begotten a child,
the fondness for children obsesses him and he settles on the family estate[24] and does not go forth from the home
to the homeless life.

In the bounds of the brāhmans of old he stays
nor transgresses them;
and it is said:

"Within bounds
he keeps
and transgresses not."

And therefore the brāhman is called bounded.

Thus, Doṇa,
the brāhman becomes bounded.

§

[167] And how, Doṇa,
becomes a brāhman
a breaker of bounds?[25]

Take the (case, Doṇa, of a brāhman
who is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations,
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach in point of birth —
he for eight and forty years
leads the Brahma-life of virginity,
applying himself to the mantras;
then, completing that course,
he seeks the teacher's fee for teaching
according to Dhamma,
not non-Dhamma.

And what there is Dhamma, Doṇa?

Never as ploughman
nor trader
nor cowherd
nor bowman
nor rajah's man
nor by any craft
(to get his living),
but solely by going about for alms,
despising not the beggar's bowl.

And he hands over the teacher's fee for teaching,
and seeks a wife
either according to Dhamma
or non-Dhamma:

one bought or sold
or a brāhmaṇī on whom the water-pouring ceremony has been performed.

He goes to a brāhmaṇī
or to the daughter of a noble or low-caste man
or a serf;
to the daughter of an outcast
or a hunter
or a bamboo-worker
or a cart-maker
or an aboriginal;
he goes to a woman with child,
to one giving suck,
to one in her season,
to one not in her season;
and for him
the brāhmaṇī becomes
just a means for lust,
for sport
and for pleasure
or to beget offspring.

And he keeps not within the Ancient brāhman bounds,
but transgresses them;
and it is said:

"He keeps not within bounds but transgresses,"

and therefore he is called
a breaker of bounds.

Thus, Doṇa, the brāhman becomes
a breaker of bounds.

§

And how, Doṇa, becomes a brāhman a brāhman-outcast?

Take the case, Doṇa, of a brāhman
who is well born on both sides,
pure in descent
as far back as seven generations,
both of mother and father,
unchallenged
and without reproach in point of birth —
he for eight and forty years
leads the Brahma-life of virginity,
applying himself to the mantras;
then, completing that course,
he seeks the teacher's fee for teaching
according to Dhamma,
or non-Dhamma:
as ploughman,
trader,
cowherd,
bowman,
rajah's man or by some craft
or, despising not the beggar's bowl, just by going about for alms.

On handing back the teacher's fee, he seeks a wife
according to Dhamma
or non-Dhamma:
one bought or sold,
or a brāhmaṇī
on whom water has been poured.

He goes to a brāhmaṇī
or to the daughter of a noble
or low-caste man
or a serf;
to the daughter of an outcast
or a hunter
or a bamboo-worker
or a cart-maker
or an aboriginal;
he goes to a woman with child,
to one giving suck,
to one in her season,
to one not in her season;
and for him
the brāhmaṇī becomes
just a means for lust,
for sport
and for pleasure
or to beget offspring.

He leads a life doing all these things.

Then the brāhmans say thus of him;

"How is it that an honourable brāhman leads this sort of life?"

and to this he replies:

"Just[26] as fire burns clean things or unclean, [168] but not by that is the fire defiled;
even so, good sire, if a brāhman lead a life doing all these things, not by that is a brāhman defiled."

And it is said:

"He leads a life doing all these things,"

and therefore he is called a brāhman-outcast.

Thus, Doṇa, a brāhman becomes a brāhman-outcast.

§

Verily, Doṇa,
those brāhman-sages of old,
mantra-makers,
mantra-sayers,
whose ancient collection of mantra verses,
hymns
and sayings,
brāhmans now ever hymn,
ever say,
ever word the word,
ever have the sayings said —
to wit:
Aṭṭaka
Vāmaka
Vāmadeva
Vessāmitta
Yamataggi
Aṅgīrasa
Bhāradvāja
Vāseṭṭha
Kassapa
and Bhagu —
these five brāhmans declared:

the Brahma-like,
the deva-like,

the bounded,
the breaker of bounds
and, fifthly,
the brāhman-outcast.

Which of them, Doṇa,
are you?'

■

'If such there are[27] Master Gotama,
we at least do not fulfil (the ways of) the brāhman-outcast!

But it is marvellous what you say, Master Gotama,
it's wonderful, Master Gotama![ed1]

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma has been blazed abroad by Master Gotama in manifold ways.

'I, Master Gotama,
go to Master Gotama for refuge,
to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;
let Master Gotama look upon me as a lay-disciple,
to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

[1] This brāhman is presumably the same as at A. ii, 37. Bu. offers no help; there is also the Doṇa who received the B.'s bowl, D. ii, 106; for the Tibetan story known as Droṇasama, Cf. Rockhill's Life, and Chwang, ii, 43, possibly there a nickname.

[2] This para, recurs at A. iv, 173.

[3] Tvam pi no paṭijānāsi?' Vv.ll. of no are ne and kho.

[4] Cf. above, § 134.

[5] Cf. G.S. i, 146; D. i, 120; M. ii, 147; Sn. p. 105; Mil. 10. At A. i, 163 this section follows the verses given in our § 179.

[6] This is also stock; see Vin. i, 245, D. i, 104, M. ii, 170; Cf. A. iv, 61. Our Comy. repeats DA. i, 273.

[7] Brahma-aama.

[8] Cf. Āpastamba, ii, 12 f. (S.B.E. ii, 7, also Manu referred to there); A. iv, 37; Sn. 389; SnA. 316 ff. refers to our text.

[9] Komāra-brahmacariyaṃ.

[10] Comy. the Vedas.

[11] This list recurs at M. i, 85; A. iv, 281.

[12] Comy. the beggar's portion.

[13] Cf. D. iii, 223; M. ii, 76; S. v, 115; A. iv, 390.

[14] Brahma-vihāre.

[15] Brahma-sama; see Expos. i, 262; Sn. 508.

[16] Udak'ūpassaṭṭha. Comy. glosses: pariccattaṃ, and explains: after pouring water on her hands they give her to him. Upa√sṛj can mean: to cause to flow (water) in Skt.; Cf. the ceremony at A. iv, 210; it is now used in Ceylon.

[17] Cf. M. ii, 183.

[18] Atimīḷhajo. Comy. atimīḷhe mahāgūtharāsimhi jāto; Tr. Dict. suggests adhi- for ati-.

[19] A-suci-paṭipīto, S.e. so; P.E.D. prefers v.l. pīḷita, but √pā connects with pāyamāna of the text.

[20] With S.e. we should read utuniṃ for an- of the text.

[21] Text methunaṃ, with v.l. mithunaṃ; Comy. and S.e. so; P.E.D. does not notice this form, but see Childers and Skt. Dict. s.v. Comy. observes: Dhītaraṃ vā puttaṃ vā uppādetvā. ...

[22] Saggaṃ lokaṃ.

[23] Mariyāda, SnA. 318 ff.

[24]We should read kuṭwnbaṃ with Comy. and S.e.

[25] Sambhinna-mariyāda.

[26] I cannot trace this simile elsewhere, but for the sentiment Cf. Sn. 547, 812; J. v, 485.

[27] Evaṃ sante.

[ed1] Hare abridges as does the PTS Pali, the BJT Pali has the full formula. I have picked this up from AN 5.194.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 193

Saṅgārava Suttaṃ

Brāhman Sangārava[1]

---

[168]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī.

Now brāhman Sangārava[2] visited the Exalted One
and greeted him;
and after exchanging the customary words of greetings,
sat down at one side.

So seated,
brāhman Sangārava said to the Exalted One:

"What is the cause, Master Gotama,
what is the reason,
why sometimes[3] even mantras long studied
are not clear,[4]
not to speak of those not studied;
and what is the cause,
what the reason,
why sometimes even mantras not long studied

are clear,
not to speak of those studied?"

▪

"When, brāhman,
one dwells with heart possessed by lust and passion,
overwhelmed by lust and passion,
and knows [169] not the escape[5]
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

Suppose, brāhman, a pot of water,
mixed with lac,
turmeric,
blue
or yellow dye,[6]
and a man with eyes to see
were to look there
for his own face-refection —
he would not know it,

he would not see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by lust and passion,
overwhelmed thereby,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

▪

Again, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by ill-will,
overwhelmed by ill-will,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;

knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
heated on the fire,
boiling up and bubbling over,
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would not know it,
he would not see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by ill-will,
overwhelmed by ill-will,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not

the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

▪

Again, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by sloth and torpor
overwhelmed by sloth and torpor,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

[170] Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
covered over with slimy moss
and water-plants,[7]
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would not know it,

he would not see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by sloth and torpor,
overwhelmed by sloth and torpor,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

▪

Again, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by flurry and worry
overwhelmed by flurry and worry,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;

knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
were shaken[8] with the wind,
so that the water trembled, eddied
and rippled,
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would not know it,
he would not see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by flurry and worry,
overwhelmed by flurry and worry,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;

knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

▪

Again, brāhman, when one dwells with heart possessed by doubt,
overwhelmed by doubt,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
stirred[8] up,
turbid,
made muddy,

set in a darkened room,[9]
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would not know it,
he would not see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart possessed by doubt,
overwhelmed by doubt,
and knows not the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows not,
sees not
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows not,
sees not
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied.

§

"When, brāhman,
one dwells with heart neither possessed by lust and passion,
nor overwhelmed by lust and passion,

and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
[171] the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

Suppose, brāhman, a pot of water,
unmixed with lac,
turmeric,
blue
or yellow dye,
clear,
limpid,
pellucid,
set in the open,
and a man with eyes to see
were to look there
for his own face-refection —
he would know it,
he would see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by lust and passion,

nor overwhelmed thereby,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

▪

Again, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by ill-will,
nor overwhelmed by ill-will,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;

knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
unheated on the fire,
not boiling up and bubbling over,
clear,
limpid,
pellucid,
set in the open,
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would know it,
he would see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by ill-will,
nor overwhelmed by ill-will,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees

the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

▪

Again, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by sloth and torpor
nor overwhelmed by sloth and torpor,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
not covered over with slimy moss
and water-plants,
clear,
limpid,

pellucid,
set in the open,
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would know it,
he would see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by sloth and torpor,
nor overwhelmed by sloth and torpor,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

▪

Again, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by flurry and worry
nor overwhelmed by flurry and worry,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;

then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
not shaken with the wind,
untrembling,
without eddies
and ripples,
clear,
limpid,
pellucid,
set in the open,
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would know it,
he would see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by flurry and worry,
nor overwhelmed by flurry and worry,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;

then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied
are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

▪

Again, brāhman, when one dwells with heart neither possessed by doubt,
nor overwhelmed by doubt,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied

are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

Suppose, brāhman,
a pot of water,
not stirred up,
not turbid,
not made muddy,
not set in a darkened room,
clear,
limpid,
pellucid,
set in the open,
and a man with eyes to see were to look there for his own face-refection —
he would know it,
he would see it,
as it really was;
even so, brāhman,
when one dwells with heart neither possessed by doubt,
nor overwhelmed by doubt,
and knows the escape
from the surge thereof,
as it really is;
then he knows,
sees
the self-goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
another's goal,
as it really is;
knows,
sees
the goal of both,
as it really is;
then even the mantras not long studied

are clear,
not to speak of those long studied.

This verily, brāhman, is the cause,
the reason,
why sometimes even mantras long studied
are not clear,
not to speak of those not studied;
and this is the cause,
the reason,
why sometimes even mantras not long studied are clear,
not to speak of those studied.'

But it is marvellous what you say, Master Gotama,
it's wonderful, Master Gotama![ed1]

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma has been blazed abroad by Master Gotama in manifold ways.

'I, Master Gotama,
go to Master Gotama for refuge,
to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;
let Master Gotama look upon me as a lay-disciple,
to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

---

[1] The whole sutta recurs at S. v, 121 ff. (K.S. v, 102), 'At Sāvatthi.'

[2] Discourses with this brāhman occur at S. i, 183; A. i, 168; v, 232, 252; Cf. also M. ii, 210 (there termed māṇavo, young; see K.S. i, 231 n.).

[3] Ekadā; P.E.D. does not give this meaning but see Skt. Dict. (Macdonell's).

[4] Na ppaṭibhaniti. K.S. trsl. 'do not recur,' from √bhā, to shine.

[5] Nissaraṇa. Comy. observes that in respect of lust the escape is by elimination, suitable resort and cutting off by means of 'asubha' musing, insight and the way of arahantship, respectively; of ill-will the first and third, substituting 'metta' for 'asubha' and the way of the Non-retumer; of sloth and torpor the same but by means of 'ālokasaññā' and arahantship; of flurry and worry the same but substituting calm for 'ālokasaññā'; the escape from doubt is by elimination, by Dhamma-determining (-vavatthāna).

Nīvaraṇā Diversion	Nissaraṇa Escape
kāmarāga lust	elimination, suitable resort, cutting off by asubha meditation (meditation on the foul) insight, and the way of arahantship
vyāpāda deviation	elimination, cutting off by 'metta' meditation (meditation on loving kindness), and the way of the non-returner thīnamiddha sloth and inertia	elimination, cutting off by 'ālokasaññā' meditation (meditation on light) and arahantship uddhaccakukkucca fear and trembling	elimination, cutting off by samatha meditation (calming down)
vicikicchā doubt and wavering	elimination and Dhamma-analysis (vavatthāna)

See also: Glossology Nīvaraṇā

[6] For this list see M. i, 127; S. ii, 101.

[7] Cf. above, § 162; here Comy. Tilabījakādi-bhedena sevālena vā nīla-maṇḍaka-piṭṭhi-vaṇṇena vā udaka-piṭṭhiṃ chādetvā nibbatta-paṇaka-pariyonaddho.

[8] Cf. Mil. 35, 259-60.

[9] Comy. Anāloka-ṭṭhāne ṭhapito.

[ed1] Hare abridges as does the PTS Pali, the BJT Pali has the full formula. I have picked this up from AN 5.194.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 194

Kāraṇapāli Suttaṃ

Brāhman Kāraṇapālin

---

[171]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once dwelling near Vesālī,
at the Gabled Hall,
in Mahāvana.

Now at that time brāhman Karaṇapālin[1] built a building for the Licchavis.

And brāhman [172] Kāraṇapālin saw brāhman Piṅgiyānin[2] some way off, coming along;
and on seeing him (approach), he said:

'Pray[3] now,
whence comes his honour Piṅgiyānin
so early in the day?

'I am come here, sir,
from the presence of the recluse Gotama.'

'Well, what thinks his honour Piṅgiyānin of the recluse Gotama's clarity in wisdom;[4] does he think him a wise man?'[5]

'But who am I [to him], sir;
and who am I to judge of his clarity?

Is it not one who is like him that can alone judge
the recluse Gotama's clarity in wisdom?

'Lofty indeed is the praise with which his honour Piṅgiyānin praises the recluse Gotama.'

'But who am I [to him], sir;
and who am I to praise the recluse Gotama?

Verily, praised by the praised[6]
is his honour Gotama, chief among devas and men.'

'But what good thing does his honour Piṅgiyānin see to have so great faith in the recluse Gotama?

'Just,[7] sir, as a man,
well satisfied with some choice savour,
longs not for other savours that are mean;
even so, sir, whenever one hears his honour Gotama's Dhamma,
whether in the sayings,
the psalms,
the catechisms
or the marvels —
none longs for the talks of others:
the many-folk,

recluses
or brāhmans.

[173] Just,[8] sir, as a man,
overcome by hunger and weakness,
may come upon a honey cake and,
whenever he taste,
enjoy the sweet, delicious savour;
even so, sir, whenever one hears his honour Gotama's Dhamma,
whether in the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms
or marvels —
he wins elation,[9]
wins serenity of mind.

Just, sir, as a man may come upon a stick of sandalwood, yellow or red, and,
wherever he smell,
at the root,
in the middle,
at the top —
may come upon an exceeding fair, delicious smell:
even so, sir, whenever one hears his honour Gotama's Dhamma,
whether in the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms
or marvels —
he finds joy,
finds happiness.

Just,[10] sir, as a clever physician might in a trice
take away the sickness
of one sick and ailing,

grievously ill;
even so, sir, whenever one hears his honour Gotama's Dhamma,
whether in the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms
or marvels —
grief,
lamentation,
suffering,
sorrow
and despair
vanish away.

Just,[10] sir, as a man,
tortured by heat,
by heat forspent,
wearied,
craving
and thirsty,
might come to a pool,
clear,
sweet,
cool,
limpid,
a lovely resting-place,
and might plunge therein,
bathe and drink,
and allay all woe,
fatigue
and fret;
even so, sir, whenever one hears his honour Gotama's Dhamma,
whether in the sayings,
psalms,
catechisms
or marvels —
all woe,

fatigue
and fret
is wholly allayed.'

And when he had thus spoken,
brāhman Karaṇapalin arose from his seat,
arranged his upper robe on his shoulder,
set his right knee on the ground,
and, bending forth his outstretched hands towards the Exalted One, three times uttered this utterance:[11]

'Honour to him, the Exalted One, arahant, fully enlightened.

Honour to him, the Exalted One, arahant, fully enlightened.

Honour to Mm, the Exalted One, arahant, fully enlightened.'

(Then said he:)

'Wonderful is it, Master Piṅgiyānin, [174]
wonderful is it, Master Piṅgiyānin!|| ||

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma has been blazed[12] abroad by his honour Piṅgiyānin in manifold ways.

'I, too,[13] Master Piṅgiyānin, go to that exalted Gotama for refuge,
to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;
let his honour Piṅgiyānin look upon me as a lay-disciple,

to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

[1] I cannot find mention of this brāhman elsewhere; Comy. observes that he built buildings for rajahs' families; getting up early, he was having the unfinished walls of a gateway built; he (also) looked after the feeding of the aged. The text reads 'Licchavīnaṃ kammantaṃ kāreti'; according to Childers (quoting Senart's Kaccāyanappakaraṇaṃ) kāreti with acc. and gen. means: he causes someone (gen.) to do something (acc.); see his Dict. s.v.

[2] Nor cam I trace this brāhman elsewhere except in the next sutta; Comy. observes that he was established in the fruit of a Non-returner.

[3] All this to the similes recurs at M. i, 175; ii, 208 of others. The br. K. addresses br. P. by bhavaṃ and after conversion by bho, speaking of the B. as samana firstly, latterly as bhavantaṃ (so S.e. but v.l. bhagavantaṃ); br. P. addresses br. K. by bho, speaking of the B. as samaṇa and bhavaṃ.

[4] Paññāveyyattiya.

[5] Our text, S.e. and M. ii maññe-ti, but M. i and our Comy. maññati, explaining: 'bhavaṃ P. samaṇaṃ Gotamaṃ paṇḍito ti maññati, udāhu no?'

[6] Pasattha-pasattho. Lord Chalmers: 'praise upon praise is his,' but our Comy. instances, among others, Pasenadi, Bimbisāra, Cankī, Visākhā, Sakka, Brahmā, observing: pasatthehi va pasattho-ti pi, pasatthapasattho.

[7] Cf. Psalm cvii, 9 for a similar sentiment.

[8] This recurs at M. i, 114; Cf. Psalm xxxiv, 8; our text should read sādu-rasaṃ or sāduṃ with M.

[9] Attamanatā, with Bu., but see P.E.D.

[10] Cf. above, § 162.

[11] Cf. M. ii, 209; D. ii, 288.

[12] Pakāsito

[13] Es'ahaṃ

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 195

Piṅgiyānī Suttaṃ

Brāhman Piṅgiyānin

---

[174]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was once dwelling near Vesālī,
at the Gabled Hall,
in Mahāvana,
some five hundred Licchavis had gathered round to honour him.

And[1] some were dark, dark-skinned, in dark clothes clad, darkly adorned;
and some were fair, fair-skinned, in fair clothes clad, fairly adorned;
and some were ruddy, red-skinned, in russet clad, in red adorned;
and some were white, pale-skinned, in white clothes clad, in white adorned;
but of a truth the Exalted One, in grace and glory, outshone them all.

Now brāhman Pingiyānin rose from his seat, girt his upper robe about his shoulder, bent forth his outstretched hands to the Exalted One and said:

It[2] has been revealed to me, 0 Blessed One;
it has been revealed to me, 0 Well-gone!'

'Speak thou that thing, Pingiyānin said the Exalted One.

Then brāhman Pingiyānin extolled the Exalted One before his face in this same verse:[3]

Sweet though at dawn red lotus-lilies blow,
'Tis sweeter in full bloom their blossoms grow:
[175] Lo! see Angīrasa,[4] illuminant,
Like as the midday sun, all radiant.'[5]

Then those Licchavis presented brāhman Pingiyānin with five hundred upper robes and brāhman Pingiyānin presented them to the Exalted One.

Then said the Exalted One to those Licchavis:

'Five,[6] 0 licchavis, are the treasures rarely revealed in the world.

What five?

The Tathāgata, arahant, fully enlightened,[7] is rarely revealed in the world;
rare in the world is one able to teach the Tathāgata-declared Dhamma-discipline;
rare is one able to recognize the teaching,
declared by the Tathāgata;
rare is one who steps his way in Dhamma by Dhamma, recognizing the teaching of the Tathāgata-declared Dhamma-discipline;
rare in the world is a person grateful and thankful.

Verily, 0 Licchavis, these are the five treasures
rarely revealed in the world.'

---

[1] This is a stock passage; see D. ii, 96; Cf. A. iv, 263, of fairies.

[2] Sn. p. 79; S. i, 189.

[3] This verse recurs at S. i, 81 (K.S. i, 107); J. i, 116; Vism. 388. Vism trsl. misses the point of comparison, but see the story there.

[4] That is, the B.; our Comy. "Bhagavato aṅga-m-aṅgehi rasmiyo niccharanti, tasmā angīraso" ti vuccati¡ see Brethr. 251; Dial. iii, 189. Thomas' Life observes: 'descendant of Angiras' (p. 22). Rockhill gives the Tibetan version thus: 'and as they (the B.'s miraculously born ancestors) were "born from his loins" (the rishi Gautama's) they were called Angīrasas.' I have taken Bu.'s explanation. Cf. above, § 192.

[5] Cf. Thag. 426.

[6] Cf.. above, § 143.

[7] Sammā-sambuddha.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 196

Mahā-Supina Suttaṃ

Dreams

---

[175]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, to the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest[1] —
ere his full awakening,[2]
when he was not yet wholly awakened[3]
and but a being awakening[4] — there came five great dreams.[5]

What five?

Monks, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest [176] —

ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening — (dreamed that) this mighty world was his bed of state;
the mountain-king, Himālaya, his pillow;
that his left hand rested[6]
on the eastern sea;
his right on the western sea;
and that both his feet
rested on the southern sea.

Monks, to the Tathāgata, arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening —
this first great dream came.

▪

Again, monks, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening — dreamed that there went out from his navel[7] Tiriyā[8] grass
and it stopped not,
until it touched the clouds.

Monks, to the Tathāgata, arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened

and but a being awakening —
this second dream came.

▪

Again, monks, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening — dreamed that white worms
with black heads
crept up over his feet
as far as his knees
and covered them.

Monks, to the Tathāgata, arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening —
this third dream came.

▪

Again, monks, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening — dreamed that there came four birds of varied hues
from the four quarters of the world

and they fell at his feet
and became all white.

Monks, to the Tathāgata, arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening —
this fourth dream came.

▪

Again, monks, the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening — dreamed that he walked to and fro
on a great mountain of dung,
but was unbesmeared with dung.

Monks, to the Tathāgata, arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet wholly awakened
and but a being awakening —
this fifth dream came.

§

Monks, when indeed to the Tathāgata,
arahant,

fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet fully awakened
and but a being awakening —
there came the dream
that this great world was his bed of state
the mountain-king, Himālaya, his pillow;
that his left hand rested
on the eastern sea;
his right on the western sea;
and that both his feet
rested on the southern sea;
monks, by the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest,
the unsurpassed,
full awakening to the highest[9]
was wholly-awakened[10]
(within him).

To him, wholly awakening,[11]
this first dream came.[12]

▪

When indeed to the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet fully awakened
and but a being awakening — there came the dream that there went [177] out from his navel Tiriyā grass
and it stopped not,
until it touched the clouds;
monks, by the Tathāgata,

arahant,
fully awake to the highest,
the Ariyan eightfold Way
was wholly awakened
(within him)
and well proclaimed
as far as devas and men (exist).[13]

To him, wholly awakening,
this second dream came.

▪

When indeed to the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet fully awakened
and but a being awakening —
there came the dream that white worms
with black heads
crept up over his feet
as far as his knees
and covered them; monks, many white-robed householders found lifelong refuge in the Tathāgata.

To him, wholly awakening,
this third dream came.

▪

When indeed to the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,

when he was not yet fully awakened
and but a being awakening —
there came the dream that the four birds
of varied hues
from the four quarters of the world
and they fell at his feet
and became all white; monks, these four castes —
noble,
brāhman,
low
and serf —
went forth from the home
to the homeless life
into that Dhamma-discipline taught by the Tathāgata and Realized Unsurpassed liberation.

To him, wholly awakening,
this fourth dream came.

▪

When indeed to the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet fully awakened
and but a being awakening —
there came the dream that he walked to and fro
on a great mountain of dung,
but was unbesmeared with dung; monks, the Tathāgata received the requisites: -
robe,
alms,
lodging

and medicaments for sickness —
and in them the Tathāgata found enjoyment, yet was not tied,
trussed
nor attached[14] thereto,
seeing the danger,
wise as to the escape therefrom.

To him, wholly awakening,
this fifth dream came.

Monks, to the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully awake to the highest —
ere his full awakening,
when he was not yet fully awakened
and bat a being awakening — there came these five great dreams.'

---

[1] Sammā-sambuddha.

[2] Sambodha.

[3] an-abhisambuddha.

[4] Bodhisatta

[5] These five are referred to at J. i, 69; see Thomas' Life, 70 n. Our Comy. observes that there are four dream-causes: (1) body-disturbances, due to bile, producing dreams such as falling from a precipice or flying or being chased by a beast or robber; (2) previous happenings; (3) being deva-possessed, and devas bring thoughts both for one's good and otherwise; (4) premonitions; this last is the Bodhisat's. Cf. Milinda, Dilemma 75 (p. 297).

[6] Ohita (Thomas loc. cit.), 'plunged,' but Comy. na udakasmiṃ.

[7] Thomas, 'hand,' but the Pāli is nābhi.

[8] Comy. dabbha, kusa grass.

[9] Sammā-sambodhi.

[10] Abhisambuddha.

[11] Abhisambodha.

[12] I give a literal trsl. of the five; the meaning no doubt is that the Bodhisat so interpreted the dreams.

[13] Yāva devamanmsehi suppakāsito; see the discussion on this at Dial. ii, 236 and P.E.D. s.v. yāva.

[14] Cf. D. i, 245; M. i, 173; S. ii, 270.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 197

Vassantarāya Suttaṃ

The Rains

---

[177]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five stays[1] to rain,
and seers know not the signs thereof,
nor can their eyes penetrate there.

What five?

Monks, when above in the sky
the fiery element rages,
the pent up storm clouds part their ways —
this, monks, is the first stay to rain,
and seers know not the sign thereof,
nor can their eyes penetrate there.

▪

Again, when above in the sky
the windy element rages, [178] the pent up storm clouds part their ways —
this, monks, is the second stay to rain,
and seers know not the sign thereof,
nor can their eyes penetrate there.

▪

Again, when Rāhu,[2] the Asura king, gathers water with his hand and spills it into the mighty ocean — this, monks, is the third stay to rain,
and seers know not the sign thereof,
nor can their eyes penetrate there.

▪

Again, when the rain-cloud devas are indolent — this, monks, is the fourth stay to rain,
and seers know not the sign thereof,
nor can their eyes penetrate there.

▪

Again, monks, when men are not Dhamma-doers —
this is the fifth stay to rain,
and seers know not the sign thereof,
nor can their eyes penetrate there.

Verily, monks, these are the five stays to rain,
and seers know not the signs thereof,
nor can their eyes penetrate there.'

[1] Cf. Job xxxviii, 37: 'Who can stay the bottles of heaven?'

[2] Who at eclipses swallows the moon.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 198

Subhā-Sita-Vācā Suttaṃ

The Word[1]

---

[178]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a word have five marks,
it is well spoken,
not ill spoken,
nor is it blameworthy
nor blameable by the wise.

It is spoken in season,[2]
it is spoken in truth,
it is spoken softly,[3]
it is spoken about the goal,
it is spoken in amity.

Verily, monks, if a word have these five marks,
it is well spoken,
not ill spoken,
nor is it blameworthy
nor blameable by the wise/

---

[1] Cf. above, § 107, also Sn. p. 78; S. i, 188.

[2] Cf. Proverbs xv, 23: 'A word spoken in due season, how good it is!'

[3] Job xli, 3; Proverbs xv, 1.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 199

Kula Suttaṃ

The Family

---

[178]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, when virtuous world-forsakers approach a family,
men there in five ways
beget much merit.

In what five?

Monks, when virtuous world-forsakers approach, men, seeing them,
make calm their hearts;
monks, that leads heavenward
and the family then
has stepped a step along the way.[1]

▪

Or when virtuous world-forsakers approach, men stand up,
salute
and offer a seat;
monks, that leads to birth in higher rank
and the family then
has stepped a step along the way.

▪

Or when virtuous world-forsakers approach, men rid themselves
of all stain of meanness;
monks, that leads to great power
and the family then
has stepped a step along the way.

▪

[179] Or when virtuous world-forsakers approach, men share (their food)
as means and power allow;
monks, that leads to great wealth and the family thea
has stepped a step along the way.

▪

Or when virtuous world-forsakers approach, men ask,
make question about
and listen to Dhamma;
monks, that leads to great wisdom
and the family then
has stepped a step along the way.

Monks, when virtuous world-forsakers approach a family,
men there in these five ways
beget much merit.'

---

[1] Paṭipadaṃ paṭipannaṃ hoti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
XX. Brāhmaṇa Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XX: The Brāman

Sutta 200

Nissāraṇīya Suttaṃ

The Escape

---

[179]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five elements of escape.

What five?

Monks,[1] take the case of a monk who thinks on lust
and whose heart leaps[2] not up
at lustful thoughts,
yet becomes not calm,
nor firm,
nor inclined[3] thereunto;
but whose heart

at the thought of giving up all
leaps up,
becomes calm,[4]
becomes firm
and inclined thereunto —
that heart of his is well gone,[5]
well become,
well lifted up,
well unyoked from lustful thoughts;
and he is freed
from the cankers that surge — lust-caused,
painful
and burning —
nor feels he that feeling.

This is declared to be the escape from lusts.

▪

Again, monks, take the case of a monk who thinks on ill-will
and whose heart leaps not up
at thoughts of ill-will,
yet becomes not calm,
nor firm,
nor inclined thereunto;
but whose heart
at the thought of non-ill-will[ed1]
leaps up,
becomes calm,
becomes firm
and inclined thereunto —
that heart of his is well gone,
well become,
well lifted up,
well unyoked from thoughts of ill-will;

and he is freed
from the cankers that surge — ill-will-caused,
painful
and burning —
nor feels he that feeling.

This is declared to be the escape from ill-will.

▪

Again, monks, take the case of a monk who thinks on hurt
and whose heart leaps not up
at thoughts of hurt,
yet becomes not calm,
nor firm,
nor inclined thereunto;
but whose heart
at the thought of non-hurt
leaps up,
becomes calm,
becomes firm
and inclined thereunto —
that heart of his is well gone,
well become,
well lifted up,
well unyoked from thoughts of hurt;
and he is freed
from the cankers that surge — hurt-caused,
painful
and burning —
nor feels he that feeling.

This is declared to be the escape from hurt.

▪

Again, monks, take the case of a monk who thinks on form
and whose heart leaps not up
at thoughts of form,
yet becomes not calm,
nor firm,
nor inclined thereunto;
but whose heart
at the thought of formlessness
leaps up,
becomes calm,
becomes firm
and inclined thereunto —
that heart of his is well gone,
well become,
well lifted up,
well unyoked from thoughts of form;
and he is freed
from the cankers that surge — form-caused,
painful
and burning —
nor feels he that feeling.

This is declared to be the escape from form.

▪

Again, monks, take the case of a monk who thinks on his bundle of life[6]
and whose heart leaps not up at the thought of his bundle of life;
yet becomes not calm,
nor firm,
nor inclined thereunto;
[180] but whose heart

at the thought of the ending of his bundle of life
leaps up,
becomes calm,
becomes firm,
and inclined thereunto —
that heart of his is well gone,
well become,
well lifted up,
well unyoked from the thought of his bundle of life;
and he is freed
from the cankers that surge — caused by the bundle of life,
painful
and burning —
nor feels he that feeling.

This is declared to be the escape from one's bundle of life.

§

Lust-delights
obsess[7] him not,
delight in thoughts of ill-will
obsess him not,
delight in thoughts of hurt
obsess him not,
delight in thoughts of form
obsess him not,
delight in his bundle of life obsess him not.

He is free of obsession with lust-delight, he is free of obsession with thoughts of ill-will,
he is free of obsession with thoughts of hurt,
he is free of obsession with thoughts of form, he is free of obsession with thoughts of his bundle of life.

This monk is said to be obsession-free;
he has cut off craving,
rolled back the bolts,
and, mastering pride completely,
has made an end of Ill.[8]

Verily, monks, these are the five elements of escape.'

---

[1] Cf. the whole sutta with D. iii, 239; below VI, § 13.

[2] This is stock; M. i, 186; S. iii, 134; It. 43, etc.

[3] Na vimuccati. Comy. nāddhimuccati.

[4] We find this traditional phrase used in Mil. p. 325 f.

[5] S.e. and Comy. with v.l. sugataṃ.

[6] Sakkāya; Cf. 1 Samuel xxv, 29; from √ci, to heap (? the khandhas).

[7] Nānuseti. Comy. na nibbattati.

[8] Cf. M. i, 122; It. 47; A. iv, 8.

[ed1] Hare abbreviates with (at the thought of the opposites). The opposites here, except for the first case, are in the Pali, the negatives of the initial terms. In the case of form, 'a-rupa' is almost always translated 'formlessness' or 'the formless'.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI: Kimbila

Sutta 201

Kimbila Suttaṃ

Kimbila

---

[180]

THUS have I heard:

Once,[1] when the Exalted One was staying in the Bamboo Grove[2] near Kimbila, the venerable Kimbila visited him and,
after saluting,
sat down at one side.

So seated, he spoke thus to the Exalted One:

'Lord, what is the cause,
what is the reason,
whereby, when the Exalted One has passed away completely, Saddhamma does not become long-lasting?

'Suppose, Kimbila, after the Tathāgata has passed away completely,
the monks and the nuns,
the lay disciples both men and women,
live without[3] reverence, without heed [181] for the Teacher;
without reverence, without heed for Dhamma without reverence, without heed for the Order.

without reverence, without heed for the training;
without reverence, without heed for one another -
this is the cause,
this is the reason,
whereby, when the Tathāgata has passed away completely, Saddhamma does not become long-lasting.'

§

'And what, lord, is the cause,
the reason,
whereby, after the Tathāgata has passed away, Saddhamma becomes long-lasting?'

'Suppose, Kimbila, monks, nuns and lay-disciples
revere and give heed to the Teacher, revere and give heed to the Dhamma, revere and give heed to the Order, revere and give heed to the training;
revere and give heed to one another -
this is the cause,
the reason,
whereby, when the Tathāgata has passed away, Saddhamma becomes long-lasting.'

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 84, where this sutta recurs of 'seven'; also K.S. ii, 152; V, 151.

[2] Comy. observes that he was a 'chetty's' (seṭṭhi, banker) son in that city. S.e. and Comy. read Nicelu-vane for our Veḷu-vane, explaining: Mucalinda-; see UdA. 100. Cf. Vin. T. ii, 309; M. i, 205, etc.

[3] Comy. says they will go to a shrine with umbrellas up, sandals on, chattering; they will sleep or talk when there is preaching; they will gesticulate in the midst of the Order; they will not fulfil the training; they will fight and quarrel with one another.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI: Kimbila

Sutta 202

Dhamma-Savaṇa Suttaṃ

On Hearing Dhamma

---

[181]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five advantages from hearing Dhamma.

What five?

He hears things not heard;

purges things heard;

dispels doubt;

makes straight[1] his view;

and his heart becomes calm.

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages from hearing Dhamma.'

---

[1] Ujuṃ karoti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI: Kimbila

Sutta 203

Ājānīya Suttaṃ

The Thoroughbred[1]

---

[181]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a rajah's fine thoroughbred have five points,
it is of worth to the rajah,
valuable to the rajah,
and is reckoned a rajah's asset.

What five?

Straightness,[2]
swiftness, gentleness,[3]

patience
and restraint.

Verily, monks, if a rajah's thoroughbred have these five points,
it is of worth to the rajah,
valuable to the rajah,
and is reckoned a rajah's asset.

§

Even so, monks, if a monk have five things,[4]
he is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What five?

[182] Straightness,[5]
swiftness.[6]
gentleness,
patience
and restraint.

Verily, monks, if a monk have these five things,
he is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

[1] Ajāniyo. This is a common simile; see J.P.T.S., 1906, p. 64.

[2] Ajjavena. Comy. uju-bhāvena, avaṅka-gamanena. Cf. DhS. trsl.

[3] Madduvena. Comy. sarīra-mudutāya (? 'tender hide').

[4] Cf. Sn. 292; J. iii, 274; D. iii, 213.

[5] Comy. Ñāṇassa ujuka-gamanaṃ.

[6] Comy. Sūrassa hutvā, ñāṇassa vahana-bhāvo.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI: Kimbila

Sutta 204

Bala Suttaṃ

The Powers[1]

---

[182]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five powers.

What five?

The power of faith,
the power of conscientiousness,
the power of fear of blame,
the power of energy
the power of insight.

Verily, monks, these are the five powers.'

[1] Above § 1

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI Kimbila

Sutta 205

Ceto-Khila Suttaṃ

Mental Barrenness[1]

---

[182]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five forms of mental barrenness.

What five?

Monks, suppose a monk has doubts and is perplexed[2] about the Teacher, is not certain nor sure in him;
monks, whoso thus doubts and is perplexed about the Teacher,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart does not so incline,
it is the first form of mental barrenness.

▪

Again, suppose a monk has doubts and is perplexed about Dhamma,
is not certain nor sure in it;
monks, whoso thus doubts and is perplexed about the Dhamma,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart does not so incline,
it is the second form of mental barrenness.

▪

Again, suppose a monk has doubts and is perplexed about the Order,
is not certain nor sure in it;
monks, whoso thus doubts and is perplexed about the Order,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart does not so incline,
it is the third form of mental barrenness.

▪

Again, suppose a monk has doubts and is perplexed about the training,
is not certain nor sure in it;
monks, whoso thus doubts and is perplexed about the training,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,

perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart does not so incline,
it is the fourth form of mental barrenness.

▪

Again, suppose a monk becomes angry with his fellows in the godly life, displeased with them,
upset about them,
becomes as a barren Waste for them;
monks, whoso becomes angry with his fellows in the godly life,
displeased with them,
upset about them,
becomes as a barren Waste for them
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart does not so incline,
it is the fifth form of mental barrenness.

Verily, monks, these are the five forms of mental barrenness.'

---

[1] Cf. D. iii, 237; M. i, 101; A. iv, 460; Comy. observes that it is a stubbornness of heart; dust (in the eyes), kacavara-bhāva stumbling, khāṇuka-bhāva..

[2] Vicikicchati. Comy. vicinanto kicchati, dukkhaṃ āpajjaii, vinicchituṃ na sakkoti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI Kimbila

Sutta 206

Vinibandha Suttaṃ

Mental Bondage[1]

---

[182]

THUS have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was staying near Sāvatthī.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five forms of mental bondage.

What five?

[183] Monks, suppose a monk is not wholly free of passion as regards the lusts, nor free of desire,
nor free of fondness,
nor free of thirst,
nor free of fever,
nor free of craving;
monks, whoso is not wholly free of passion as regards the lusts,

nor free of desire,
nor free of fondness,
nor free of thirst,
nor free of fever,
nor free of craving,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion,
it is the first form of mental bondage.

▪

Monks, suppose a monk is not wholly free of passion as regards the body,
nor free of desire,
nor free of fondness,
nor free of thirst,
nor free of fever,
nor free of craving;
monks, whoso is not wholly free of passion as regards the body,
nor free of desire,
nor free of fondness,
nor free of thirst,
nor free of fever,
nor free of craving,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion,
it is the second form of mental bondage.

▪

Monks, suppose a monk is not wholly free of passion as regards form[2],
nor free of desire,
nor free of fondness,
nor free of thirst,
nor free of fever,
nor free of craving;
monks, whoso is not wholly free of passion as regards form,
nor free of desire,
nor free of fondness,
nor free of thirst,
nor free of fever,
nor free of craving,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion,
it is the third form of mental bondage.

▪

Or, monks, suppose a monk,
after eating as much as his belly will hold,
gives himself over to the ease of bed,

of lying on his back,
of slumber,
monks, whoso, after eating as much as his belly will hold,
gives himself over to the ease of bed,
of lying on his back,
of slumber,
his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion,
it is the fourth form of mental bondage.

▪

Or, monks, suppose a monk,
lives the godly life set on gaining some deva body, thinking:

"By this virtue,
practice,
austerity,
or godly living
I shall become a deva
or one of a deva's retinue."

Monks, whoso is not wholly free from living the godly life set on gaining some deva body, thinking:

"By this virtue,
practice,
austerity,
or godly living

I shall become a deva
or one of a deva's retinue,"

his heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion.

Where the heart inclines not to ardour,
devotion,
perseverance,
exertion,
it is the fifth form of mental bondage.

Verily, monks, these are the five forms of mental bondage.'

---

[1] The references for § 205 apply here. [Ed.: Those are (altered for this sutta): D. iii, 237; M. i, 101; A. iv, 460;]

[2] Comy. his own body, but outside forms.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI: Kimbila

Sutta 207

Yāgu Suttaṃ

Gruel

---

[183]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five advantages from gruel.

What five?

It checks hunger,
keeps off thirst,
regulates wind,
cleanses the bladder[1]
and digests raw remnants of food.

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages of gruel.'

[1] Vatthi. Comy. dhamaniyo.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI: Kimbila

Sutta 208

Danta-Kaṭṭha Suttaṃ

The Tooth-Stick[1]

---

[183]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages from not chewing a tooth-stick.

What five?

The eyes become affected;[2]
the mouth becomes bad-smelling;
the channels of taste[3] are not purified;
phlegm and mucus[4] get on food;
and one does not enjoy food.

[184] Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages from not chewing a tooth-stick.'

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages[ed1] from chewing a tooth-stick.

What five?

The eyes do not become affected;
the mouth does not become bad-smelling;
the channels of taste are purified;
phlegm and mucus do not get on food;
and one enjoys food.

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages from chewing a tooth-stick.'

---

[1] See Vin ii, 137 (S.B.E. xx, 147), also [VP.CV.5.31. Horner] where this recurs.

[2] Acakkhussaṃ. Comy. na cakkhūnaṃ hitaṃ; cakkhuṃ visuddhaṃ na karoti. Cf. Rhys Davids' note at S.B.E. loc. cit.

[3] Rasa-haraṇiyo.

[4] Pittaṃ semhaṃ.

[ed1] Hare abridges, see the Horner Vinaya translation for a translation of the 'opposites'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI: Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI Kimbila

Sutta 209

Gītassara Suttaṃ

The Plain-song[1]

---

[184]

[1]'Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to one preaching Dhamma
in a long-drawn,[2] plain-song voice.

What five?

He is either carried away himself[3] by the sound;
or others are carried away thereby;
or householders are offended and say:

"Just as we sing,
for sure,
these recluse Sakya sons sing!";

or as he strives alter purity of sound,
there is a break in concentration;
and folk coming after
fall into the way of (wrong) views.[4]

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one preaching Dhamma

in a long-drawn, plain-song voice.'

---

[1] This recurs at Vin. ii, 108 (S.B.E. xx, 72); gītā.

[2] Āyatakena. Comy. dīghena ...

[3] Attanā pi sārajjati, v.l. attā.

[4] Cf. above, § 79; below V, § 218.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXI. Kimbila-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXI: Kimbila

Sutta 210

Muṭṭha-s-Sati Suttaṃ

Forgetful in Mindfulness

---

[184]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to one who,
forgetful in mindfulness,
not self-possessed,
falls asleep.

What five?

Badly[1] he sleeps,
badly he wakes,
he sees evil visions,

devas guard him not,
and impurity[2] is emitted.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one falling asleep,
forgetful in mindfulness,
not self-possessed.'

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
to one falling asleep
set in mindfulness.

What five?

He sleeps well,
he wakes well,
he sees no evil visions,
devas guard him,
and impurity is not emitted.

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages
to one falling asleep
set in mindfulness.

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 150: v, 342; J. ii, 61; Mil. 198; Vism. 311.

[2] Asuci Childers, quoting Abhidhāna-p-padīpikā 'semen virile.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXII. Akkosaka-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 211

Akkosaka Suttaṃ

Abuse

---

[184]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, that monk who abuses and reviles
men that lead the godly life;
who rails at Ariyans[1] —
five disadvantages may be expected for him.

What five?

[185] Either he merits expulsion, a definite hindrance;[2]
or he commits a foul offence;[3] or he is stricken by a grievous[4] disease or illness;
or he dies muddled (in thought);[5]

and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Monks, that monk who abuses and reviles
men that lead the godly life;
who rails at Ariyans —
these five disadvantages may be expected for him.'

---

[1] Cf. A. v, 160.

[2] Chinna-paripantho, a 'cut,' precise hindrance; Cf. paricchindati. Comy. lok'uttara-paripanthassa chinnattā. The compound is unusual; chinna- generally means 'without.'

[3] Cf. S. ii, 271; A. v, 169.

[4] Our text with S.e. reads bāḷha; A. ii, 174 and v, 169 gāḷha; but Cf. D. i, 72.

[5] Nyāṅatiloka has a restless death, which is hardly accurate.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXII. Akkosaka-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 212

Bhaṇḍana-Kāraka Suttaṃ

Strife

---

[185]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, that monk who is a maker of strife,
a maker of quarrels,
a maker of contention,
a maker of brawls,
a maker of disputes[1] —
five disadvantages may be expected for him.

What five?

He[2] reaches not the unreached (state);
he falls away from the reached;
an evil rumour of his worth spreads abroad;

he dies muddled (in thought);
and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Monks, that monk who is a maker of strife,
a maker of quarrels,
a maker of contention,
a maker of brawls,
a maker of disputes —
these five disadvantages may be expected for him.'

---

[1] Cf. Vin. i, 328; ii, 1.

[2] Cf.. A. v, 169, 317.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXII. Akkosaka-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 213

Sīla Suttaṃ

Morals

---

[185]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] there are these five disadvantages
to one wanting morals,
failing in morals.

What five?

Consider,[2] monks,
the man without morals,
failing in morals —
he comes to suffer much loss in wealth through neglect.

This, monks, is the first disadvantage
to one wanting morals,
failing in morals.[3]

▪

[186] Or an evil rumour spreads about him.

This is the second disadvantage disadvantage
to one wanting morals,
failing in morals.

▪

Or whatever group he approach,
whether nobles or brāhmans,
householders
or recluses,
he does so without confidence and confused.

This is the third disadvantage
to one wanting morals,
failing in morals.

▪

Or he dies muddled (in thought).[4]

This is the fourth disadvantage
to one wanting morals,
failing in morals.

▪

Or on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,

the abyss,
hell.

This is the fifth disadvantage
to one wanting morals,
failing in morals.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages to one wanting morals, failing in morals.

§

Monks, there are these five advantages to the moral,
perfect in morals.

What five?

Consider, monks,
the moral man,
perfect in morals —
he comes great increase in wealth[ed1] through earnestness.

This, monks, is the first advantage
to the moral man,
perfect in morals.

▪

Or a lovely rumour spreads about him.

This is the second advantage
to the moral man,
perfect in morals.

▪

Or whatever group he approach,
whether nobles or brāhmans,
householders
or recluses,
he does so with confidence and unconfused.

This is the third advantage
to the moral man,
perfect in morals.

▪

Or he dies unmuddied (in thought).

This is the fourth advantage
to the moral man,
perfect in morals.

▪

Or on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the happy world,
the heaven world.

This is the fifth advantage
to the moral man,
perfect in morals.

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages
to the moral man,
perfect in morals.

---

[1] This sutta recurs at D. ii, 85-6; iii, 236; Vin. i, 227-8; Ud. 86; it is noticed at Vism. 54.

[2] Idha.

[3] Sīla-, elsewhere generally trsld. 'virtue.'

[4] Sammūḷha, as before, but here Comy. observes: lying on his deathbed he sees his wicked deeds revolve before him.

[ed1] Hare abridges indicating the converse should be understood. But the converse can be expressed in more than one way! I have followed the Pali using his vocabulary as much as possible.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXII. Akkosaka-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 214

Bahu-Bhāṇi Suttaṃ

A Man Full of Talk

---

[186]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to a person full of talk.

What five?

He talks falsely,
he talks maliciously,
talks roughly,
talks as a vain babbler[1]
and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,

the abyss,
hell.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
to a person full of talk.

§

Monks, there are these five advantages to a person discreet[2] in talk.

What five?

He does not talk falsely,
he does not talk maliciously,
he does not talk roughly,
he does not talk as a vain babbler
and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the happy world,
the heaven world.

---

[1] Sampha-p-palāpa; Cf. 2 Timothy ii, 16: 'Shun profane and vain babblings, for they will increase unto more ungodliness.'

[2] S.e. with text manta-, Comy. observing: mantā vuccati paññā, tāya paricchinditvā bhaṇante; Cf. SnA. 204. Our Comy. notes: matta-bhāṇismim ti mattā vuccati paññā; iti kesuci.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXII. Akkosaka-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 215

Paṭhama Akkhanti Suttaṃ

Impatience (a)

---

[186]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages from being impatient.

What five?

Not to many folk is he dear or pleasing;
he is hated much;
is avoided by many;
dies muddled in thought
and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,

the abyss,
hell.

[187] Monks, these are the five disadvantages from being impatient.

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
from being patient.

What five?

To many folk he is dear and pleasing;
he is not hated much;
is not avoided by many;
dies unmuddled in thought
and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the happy world,
the heaven world.

"Monks, there are these five advantages
from being patient.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Pañcaka Nipāta
XXII. Akkosaka-Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 216

Dutiya Akkhanti Suttaṃ

Impatience (b)

---

[187]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages from being impatient.

What five?

Not to many folk is he dear or pleasing;
he is harsh[1];
is remorseful;
dies muddled in thought
and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,

the abyss,
hell.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages from being impatient.

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
from being patient.

What five?

To many folk he is dear and pleasing;
he not harsh;
is not remorseful;
dies unmuddled in thought
and on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the happy world,
the heaven world.

"Monks, there are these five advantages
from being patient.

---

[1] The text reads luddho, v.l. kuddho, but S.e. and Comy. luddo, the latter glossing: dāruṇo, kakkhaḷo.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
22. Akkosaka Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 217

Paṭhama Apāsādika Suttaṃ

The Troubled Mind (a)

---

[187]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:
'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to one of troubled mind.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge[1] the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies muddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one of troubled mind.'

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
to one of untroubled mind.

What five?

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies unmuddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in heaven,
that happy place of bliss.[ed1]

Monks, these are the five advantages
to one of untroubled mind.'

---

[1] Anuvicca.

[ed1] from AN 5.23, pg. 13.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
22. Akkosaka Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 218

Dutiya Apāsādika Suttaṃ

The Troubled Mind (b)

---

[187]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to one of troubled mind.

What five?

Wild[1] (thoughts) are not calmed;
and some of those that are calmed
become otherwise;
the Teacher's behest is left undone;
folk coming after fall into the ways of wrong views;
and one's heart wins not to peace.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one of troubled mind.'

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
to one of untroubled mind.

What five?

Wild thoughts are calmed;
and those that are,
become much more so;
the teacher's behest is done;
after-folk get right views;
and one's heart wins to peace.

Monks, these are the five advantages
to one of untroubled mind.'

---

[1] Appasannā na ppasīdanti

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
22. Akkosaka Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 219

Aggi Suttaṃ

Fire

---

[187]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages from fire.

What five?

[188] It is bad for the eyes;[1] causes ugliness;[2]
causes weakness;
(folk-)gatherings grow;
and tales of animals are told because of it.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages from fire.'

---

[1] Acakkhusso; see above, § 208.

[2] Dubbaṇṇa-karaṇo.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
22. Akkosaka Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXII: The Abuser

Sutta 220

Madhurā[1]

---

[188]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī, at Jeta Grove, in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages in Madhurā.

What five?

(The ground) is uneven;
there is much dust;
there are fierce dogs;
bestial yakkhas;
and alms are got with difficulty.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages in Madhurā.'

---

[1] This no doubt is Madhura or Mathura on the Jumna; see Rhys Davids, Buddh. India, 36. Comy. tells of how the B. met a yakkhinī there who put out her tongue at him. M. is not mentioned in D., only in one sutta in M., never in S., and thrice in A. Later than the Buddha it became a Jain centre, 300 B.C., see C.H.I. i, 167. However, when the Chinese pilgrims Fa Hsien and Yuan Chwang visited it, Buddhism flourished there (Watters, p. 301). Quoting the Mūla sarvā.stivāda-nikāya-vinaya, he gives the following five 'defects': the ground was uneven, it was covered with stones and brickbats, it abounded in prickly shrubs, the people took solitary meals, and there were too many women' (p. 312, vol. i).

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 221

Paṭhama Dīgha-Cārika Suttaṃ

Wandering Afield (a)

---

[188]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to one who spends his days wandering afield,
wandering aimlessly.

What five?

One[1] does not hear the not-heard;
one does not purge things heard;
one is not reassured by what one hears;
one is stricken by some grievous disease or illness;
and one is friendless.[2]

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one who spends his days wandering afield,
wandering aimlessly.'

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
to one who spends his days wandering with an aim.

What five?

One hears the not-heard;
one purges things heard;
one is reassured by what one hears;
one is not stricken by some grievous disease or illness;
and one is not friendless.

Monks, these are the five advantages
to one who spends his days wandering with an aim.'

---

[1] Cf. above, § 202. Here text reads gāḷhaṃ, and so S.e.

[2] Na mittavā, not noticed by P.E.D., but see Childers.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 222

Dutiya Dīgha-Cārika Suttaṃ

Wandering Afield (b)

---

[189]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to one who spends his days wandering afield,
wandering aimlessly.

What five?

One reaches not the unreached;
falls from the reached;
is not reassured by the (state) reached;
one is stricken by some grievous disease or illness;
and one is friendless.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one who spends his days wandering afield,
wandering aimlessly.'

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
to one who spends his days wandering with an aim.

What five?

One reaches the unreached;
falls not from the reached;
is reassured by the (state) reached;
one is not stricken by some grievous disease or illness;
and one is not friendless.

Monks, these are the five advantages
to one who spends his days wandering with an aim.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 223

Paṭhama Ati-Nivāsa Suttaṃ

Staying Too Long[1] (a)

---

[189]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
from staying too long in a place.

What five?

Many belongings and their massing;
much medicine and its massing;
many duties[2]
and things to be done
and their concern;[3]
one lives with householders and wanderers, mixing with them,
not averse from laymen's company;

when one leaves that place,
one leaves it with regret.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
from staying too long in a place.

§

Monks, there are these five advantages
from staying for equal periods at places.

What five?

Not many belongings and their massing;
not much medicine and its massing;
not many duties
no things to be done
or their concern;
one does not live with householders nor wanderers,
or mix with them,
and is averse from laymen's company;
when one leaves that place,
one leaves it with no regret.

---

[1] Ati-nivāsa and sama-vattha-vāsa

[2] Cf. § 90

[3] Text reads a-vyatto (inept); v.l. S.e. and Comy. vyatto-ti vyāsatto.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 224

Dutiya Ati-Nivāsa Suttaṃ

Staying Too Long (b)

---

[189]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
from staying too long in a place.

What five?

One[1] grudges (sharing) one's lodging, or the families (who provide alms),
or one's possessions,
or fame;[2]
one grudges (sharing) Dhamma.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
from staying too long in a place.

§

Monks, there are these five advantages
from staying for equal periods at places.

What five?

One grudges not (sharing) one's lodging,
nor the families (who provide alms),
nor one's possessions,
nor fame;
one grudges not (sharing) Dhamma.

---

[1] See DhS. trsl. 299; Expos. 480; D. iii, 234; A. iv, 459.

[2] Vaṇṇa. Comy. guṇa, grace.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 225

Paṭhama Kul'ūpaga Suttaṃ

The Visitor of Families (a)

---

[189]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages to the visitor of families.

What five?

[190] In going uninvited he offends;[1]
by sitting in solitude he offends;
in using an obscure seat he offends;
in teaching Dhamma to women in more than five or six words he offends;
he lives engrossed in thoughts of lust.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages to the visitor of families.'

[1] Anāmanta-cāra. Comy. observes that on being invited to a meal, from not asking a good monk, he calls on families either before the meal or after — so in respect of the training, it is said he commits a fault. At Vin. i, 255 this word recurs with the fault a-samādāna-cāra, going for alms without taking all one's robes; possibly Bu. has made an ecclesiastical offence of it, when it really means the family visited is offended, as must be in the second and third clauses.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 226

Dutiyo Kul'Ūpaga Suttaṃ

The Visitor of Families (b)

---

[190]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

Monks, there are these five disadvantages
to a monk, who visits families
and lives in their company too much.

What five?

He[1] often sees women-folk;
from seeing them,
companionship comes;
from companionship,
intimacy;
from intimacy,
amorousness;

when the heart is inflamed,
this may be expected:
either joyless he will live the godly life or he will commit some foul offence or he will give up the training
and return to the lower life.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
to a monk, who visits families
and lives in their company too much.

---

[1] Cf. above, § 55.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 227

Bhoga Suttaṃ

Riches

---

[190]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] there are these five disadvantages in riches.

What five?

Riches are in danger of fire,
in danger of floods,
in danger of rajahs,
in danger of robbers,
in danger of unloved hairs.[2]

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages in riches.

§

Monks, there are these five advantages in riches.

What five?

With the help of riches,
one makes oneself happy,
glad,
and keeps that great happiness;

▪

one makes one's parents,
glad,
and keeps that great happiness;

▪

[191] one makes one's wife, children,
slaves,
work-folk,
men,
glad,
and keeps that great happiness;

▪

one makes one's friends and companions,
glad,
and keeps that great happiness;

▪

for recluse and brāhman
one institutes offerings of lofty aim, connected with a happy hereafter,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward.

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages in riches.'

---

[1] Cf. above, § 41.

[2] A-ppiyehi dāyādehi.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Sutta 228

Ussūra-Bhatta Suttaṃ

The Meal

---

[191]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
in a family who eat
when the sun is right up.[1]

What five?

Their honoured visitors
they honour not in time;

▪

the devas who receive oblations
they honour not in time;

▪

recluses and brāhmans
who have but one meal a day
abstain from eating at night,
eating at wrong times,
they honour not in time;

▪

their slaves,
work-folk
and men
work as men averse[2] from work;

▪

moreover as long as food is eaten unseasonably it lacks strengthening[3] qualities.

Monks, these are the five disadvantages
in a family who eat
when the sun is right up.'

§

"Monks, there are these five advantages
in a family who eat
in season.

What five?

Their honoured visitors
they honour in time;

▪

the devas who receive oblations
they honour in time;

▪

recluses and brāhmans
who have but one meal a day
abstain from eating at night,
eating at wrong times,
they honour in time;

▪

their slaves,
work-folk
and men
work as men not averse from work;

▪

moreover as long as food is eaten seasonably
it does not lack strengthening qualities.

Monks, these are the five advantages
in a family who eat
in season.'

---

[1] Ussūra. Comy. atidivā.

[2] Vimukha. Comy. observes: they give up and sit down.

[3] Anojavanta. Comy. ojaṃ pharituṃ na sakkoti.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
23. Dīgha-Cārika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIII: Wandering Afield

Suttas 229-230

Kaṇha Sappa 1 & 2

The Snake

---

[191]

Sutta 229

Paṭhama Kaṇha Sappa Suttaṃ

The Snake (a)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
in a black snake.[1]

What five?

It is unclean,
evil-smelling,

timid,[2]
fearful
and betrays friends.

These, monks, are the five disadvantages
in a black snake.

§

Even so, monks, there are these five disadvantages
in a woman.

What five?

She is unclean,
evil-smelling,
timid,
fearful
and betrays friends.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages in a woman.

---

[192]

Sutta 230

Dutiya Kaṇha Sappa Suttaṃ

The Snake (b)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;

and the Exalted One said:

'There are these five disadvantages in a black snake.

It is full of anger,
ill-will,
it is deadly poisonous,[3] forked tongued
and betrays friends.[4]

These, monks, are the five disadvantages
in a black snake.

§

Even so, monks, there are these five disadvantages
in a woman.

What five?

She is full of anger,
ill-will,
she is deadly poisonous,
is forked tongued
and betrays friends.

§

Now the deadly poison of a woman is this:
she is almost always very passionate.

▪

The forked tongue is this:
she is almost always slanderous in speech.

▪

And the betrayal of friends is this:
she almost always commits adultery.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages in a woman.'

---

[1] Cf. Vism. trsl. 797, where a water snake simile is given and is called kaṅha-sappa at 812.

[2] Sabhīru Comy. 'saniddo mahāniddaṃ niddāyati.' It is not clear how such an explanation arose.

[3] Ghora-visatā. P.E.D. omits this derivative of visa.

[4] At J. v, 447 these five are given in Comy. in explanation of kaṅha-sappasirūpama and the sub-comment on the three last terms is the same as given here; for this simile Cf. above, § 76.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 231

Abhāvanīya Suttaṃ

In Residence

---

[192]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
he becomes not what he ought to become.[1]

What five?

He becomes accomplished neither in manner nor in service;[2]

■

becomes neither one who has heard much nor one who bears much in mind;

▪

nor a marker of his ways[3]
nor fond of solitude;

▪

his words are not lovely nor lovely is their making;

▪

he becomes a dullard and witless.

Verily, monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
he becomes not what he ought to become.

§

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
he becomes what he ought to become.

What five?

He becomes accomplished in manner
and in service;

▪

becomes one who has heard much and one who bears much in mind;

■

a marker of his ways
and fond of solitude;

■

his words are lovely
and lovely is their making;

■

he becomes insightful and witty.

Verily, monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
he becomes what he ought to become.

---

[1] A-bhāvanīyo koti. Comy. on the positive: vaḍḍhanīyo hoti.

[2] Ākappa- and vatta-.

[3] Paṭisallekhitar; Cf. above, § 181; P.E.D. omits.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 232

Piya Suttaṃ

The Pious[1]

---

[192]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
he becomes among his fellows in the godly life
pious [193] and pleasing,
respected
and what he ought to become.

What five?

He becomes virtuous,[2]
abides restrained by the restraint of the Obligations,
is perfect in conduct and habit,

sees peril in the smallest fault,
accepts the training
and trains himself accordantly.

▪

He is learned,
with mind retentive and well stored;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and in letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory.

▪

He has a pleasant voice,
a good enunciation,
is urbane in speech,
distinct,
free from hoarseness
and informative.

▪

At will,
easily and without trouble,
he attains to the four states of musing,
which bring comfort
both here and now,
transcending thought.

■

By destroying the cankers
he enters and abides in the emancipation of the heart
and of insight,
which is free of the cankers,
and this state he knows and realizes for himself,
even in this life.

Verily, monks,if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
he becomes among his fellows in the godly life
pious and pleasing,
respected
and what he ought to become.'

---

[1] Piyo

[2] See above, § 87, for full details.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 233

Sobhana Suttaṃ

Grace[1]

---

[193]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence follow the course of five things,
he graces his residence.

What five?

He becomes virtuous,
abides restrained by the restraint of the Obligations,
is perfect in conduct and habit,
sees peril in the smallest fault,
accepts the training
and trains himself accordantly.

▪

He is learned,
with mind retentive and well stored;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and in letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory.

▪

He has a pleasant voice,
a good enunciation,
is urbane in speech,
distinct,
free from hoarseness
and informative.

▪

He is able to teach,
incite,
rouse
and satisfy with Dhamma talk those who visit him.

▪

At will,
easily and without trouble,

he attains to the four states of musing,
which bring comfort
both here and now,
transcending thought.

Verily, monks, if a monk in residence follow the course of five things,
he graces his residence'

---

[1] Sobhanā

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 234

Bahū-Pakāra Suttaṃ

Of Great Service

---

[193]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence follow the course of five things,
he becomes of great service to his residence.

What five?

He becomes virtuous,
abides restrained by the restraint of the Obligations,
is perfect in conduct and habit,
sees peril in the smallest fault,
accepts the training
and trains himself accordantly;

▪

he is learned,
with mind retentive and well stored;
those things lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
which set forth in spirit and in letter
the godly life of purity,
perfect in its entirety —
those are fully learnt by him,
resolved upon,
made familiar by speech,
pondered over in the mind,
fully understood in theory;

▪

he has a pleasant voice,
a good enunciation,
is urbane in speech,
distinct,
free from hoarseness
and informative;

▪

he repairs things broken and dilapidated;
and when many monks of the Order have come,
monks from various parts of the country,
he speaks to the householders who approach,
saying:

"See, good sirs,
many monks from various parts of the country have arrived;
do good;
now is the time to make merit!"

▪

At will,
easily and without trouble,
he attains to the four states of musing,
which bring comfort
both here and now,
transcending thought.

Verily, monks, if a monk in residence follow the course of five things,
he becomes of great service to his residence.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 235

Anukampaka Suttaṃ

Taking Pity

---

[193]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
he takes pity on householders.

What five?

He incites them to greater virtue;[1]

▪

he makes them live in the mirror of Dhamma;[2]

▪

when visiting the sick,
he stirs up mindfulness,
saying:

"Let the venerable ones set up mindfulness [194], that thing most worth while!";[3]

▪

and when many monks of the Order have come,
monks from various parts of the country,
he speaks to the householders who approach,
saying:

"See, good sirs,
many monks from various parts of the country have arrived;
do good;
now is the time to make merit!"

▪

and when they give him food, whether mean or choice
he enjoys it by himself, nor frustrates (the effect of that) gift of faith.[4]

Verily, monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
he takes pity on householders.

---

[1] Adhisīla. Comy. pañca-sīla.

[2] See above, § 179, n. 3.

[3] Araha-ggata. Comy. sabba-sakkārānaṃ arahe ratana-ttay'eva gataṃ.

[4] Cf. above, § 116, also Vin. i, 298.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 236

Paṭhama Avaṇṇāraha Suttaṃ

The Reward of Dispraise

---

[194]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

What five?

Without testing or plumbing the matter,
he speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;

▪

without testing or plumbing the matter,
he speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;

▪

without testing or plumbing the matter,
he shows his faith in things unbelievable;

▪

without testing or plumbing the matter,
he shows his disbelief in things believable;

▪

and he rejects the gift of faith.

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.'

§

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

What five?

After testing and plumbing the matter,
he speaks in praise of the praiseworthy;

▪

after testing and plumbing the matter,
he speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;

▪

after testing and plumbing the matter,
he shows his faith in things believable;

▪

after testing and plumbing the matter,
he shows his disbelief in things unbelievable;

▪

and he accepts the gift of faith.

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 237

Dutiya Avaṇṇāraha Suttaṃ

Stinginess (a)

---

[194]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

What five?

Without testing or plumbing the matter,
he speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;

▪

without testing or plumbing the matter,
he speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;

▪

he is stingy over (sharing) his lodging, greedy[1] as to it;

▪

stingy as to the family (who provides),
greedy as to it;

▪

and he rejects the gift of faith.

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

§

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

What five?

After testing and plumbing the matter,
he speaks in praise of the praiseworthy;

▪

after testing and plumbing the matter,
he speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;

▪

he is not stingy over (sharing) his lodging,
not greedy as to it;

▪

not stingy as to the family (who provides),
not greedy as to it;

▪

and he accepts the gift of faith.

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

---

[1] Āvāsa-paligedhī Comy. āvāsaṃ balava-giddhi-vasena gilitvā viya (gijjka, Skt. gṛdhra, is a vulture).

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 238

Tatiya Avaṇṇāraha Suttaṃ

Stinginess (b)

---

[194]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

What five?

Without testing or plumbing the matter,
he speaks in praise of the unpraiseworthy;

▪

without testing or plumbing the matter,
he speaks in dispraise of the praiseworthy;;

▪

he is stingy over (sharing) his lodging;;

▪

stingy as to the family (who provides);;

▪

and he is stingy as to gains.

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

§

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

What five?

After testing and plumbing the matter,
he speaks in praise of the praiseworthy;

▪

after testing and plumbing the matter,
he speaks in dispraise of the unpraiseworthy;

▪

he is not stingy over (sharing) his lodging;

▪

not stingy as to the family (who provides);

▪

and he is not stingy as to gains.

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 239

Paṭhama Chariya Suttaṃ

Stinginess (c)

---

[194]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

What five?

He is stingy as to praise;

▪

he is stingy over (sharing) his lodging;

▪

he is stingy as to the family (who provides);

▪

he is stingy as to gains;

▪

and he frustrates the gift of faith.

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

§

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

What five?

He is not stingy as to praise;

▪

he is not stingy over (sharing) his lodging;

▪

he is not stingy as to the family (who provides);

▪

he is not stingy as to gains;

▪

and he does not frustrate the gift of faith.

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
24. Āvāsika Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXIV: In Residence

Sutta 240

Dutiya Chariya Suttaṃ

Stinginess (d)

---

[194]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

What five?

He is stingy as to praise;
he is stingy over (sharing) his lodging;
he is stingy as to the family (who provides);
he is stingy as to gains
he is stingy of Dhamma.

"Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely cast into hell.

§

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

What five?

He is not stingy as to praise;
he is not stingy over (sharing) his lodging;
he is not stingy as to the family (who provides);
he is not stingy as to gains
he is stingy of Dhamma.

Monks, if a monk in residence
follow the course of these five things,
as his reward he is surely set in heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 241

Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;[1]

▪

from knowledge the wise dispraise him;

▪

an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;

▪

he dies muddied in thought;

▪

on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good.

The self does not upbraid the self;

▪

from knowledge the wise praise him;

▪

an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;

▪

he dies unmuddied in thought;

▪

on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in heaven,
that happy place of bliss.[ed1]

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good.'

---

[1] Cf. above, § 217.

[ed1] from AN 5.23, pg. 13.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 242

Kāya-Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil (deed)

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in deed.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies muddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in deed.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good in deed.

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies unmuddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in heaven,
that happy place of bliss.

What five?

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good in deed.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 243

Vacī-Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil (word)

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in word.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies muddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in word.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good in word.

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies unmuddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in heaven,
that happy place of bliss.

What five?

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good in word.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 244

Mano-Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil (thought)

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in thought.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies muddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in thought.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good in thought.

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he dies unmuddied in thought;
on the breaking up of the body after death
he arises in heaven,
that happy place of bliss.

What five?

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good in thought.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 245

Apara-Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil (2)

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns from Saddhamma;[1]
he is not set in Saddhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one who has walked in evil.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good.

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns not from Saddhamma;
he is set in Saddhamma.

What five?

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good.'

---

[1] Cf. above § 88

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 246

Apara-Kāya-Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil (deed 2)

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in deed.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns from Saddhamma;
he is not set in Saddhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one who has walked in evil in deed.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good in deed.

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns not from Saddhamma;
he is set in Saddhamma.

What five?

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good in deed.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 247

Apara-Vacī-Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil (word 2)

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in word.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns from Saddhamma;
he is not set in Saddhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one who has walked in evil in word.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good in word.

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns not from Saddhamma;
he is set in Saddhamma.

What five?

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good in word.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 248

Apara-Mano-Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

One Who Has Walked in Evil (thought 2)

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī; and there he addressed the monks, saying: 'Monks.'

'Yes, lord,' they replied; and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are five disadvantages to one who has walked in evil in thought.

What five?

The self upbraids the self;
from knowledge the wise dispraise him;
an evil rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns from Saddhamma;
he is not set in Saddhamma.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
to one who has walked in evil in thought.'

§

"Monks, there are five advantages to one who has walked in good in thought.

The self does not upbraid the self;
from knowledge the wise praise him;
an good rumour of his worth goes abroad;
he turns not from Saddhamma;
he is set in Saddhamma.

What five?

Verily, monks, these are the five advantages to one who has walked in good in thought.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 249

Sīvathikā Suttaṃ

The Cemetery

---

[195]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages in a cemetery.

What five?

It is unclean,
evil-smelling,
fearful,
the haunt of bestial non-humans,[1]
and is the cause of many folk wailing.[2]

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages in a cemetery.

§

Even so, monks, there are these five disadvantages
in a cemetery-like person.

What five?

Consider, monks, some person who follows the course of unclean action in deed, who follows the course of unclean action in word who follows the course of unclean action in thought — I declare this to be his uncleanness.

Monks, just as that cemetery is unclean, thus-like I declare this person to be.

§

[196] Whoso follows the course of unclean action in deed, whoso follows the course of unclean action in word whoso follows the course of unclean action in thought, an evil rumour of his worth goes about —
I declare this to be his evil smell.

Monks, just as that cemetery is evil-smelling,
thus-like I declare this person to be.

▪

At once his course is of unclean action in deed, of unclean action in word
of unclean action in thought, his pious[3] fellows in the godly life turn themselves from him and keep far away —
I declare this to be his fearfulness.

Monks, just as that cemetery is fearful,
thus-like I declare this person to be.

▪

As he follows that course of unclean action in deed, that course of unclean action in word that course of unclean action in thought, he lives with others,
sharing their ways —
I declare this to be his bestial haunting.[4]

Monks, just as that cemetery is the haunt of bestial non-humans, thus-like I declare this person to be.

▪

Seeing him thus following this course of unclean action in deed, this course of unclean action in word

this course of unclean action in thought, his pious fellows in the godly life become vexed

and say:

"Alas! this is an ill thing for us, who have to live with such a person!"

I declare this to be his making others wail.

Monks, just as that cemetery is the cause of many folk wailing,
thus-like I declare this person to be.

Verily, monks, there are these five disadvantages in a cemetery-like person.'

---

[1] As at § 77 above, see note.

[2] Ārodana, causative of √rud.

[3] Pesala, following the traditional explanation: piya-sīla.

[4] Vāḷāvasatha

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
25. Du-c-carita Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXV: Walking in Evil

Sutta 250

Puggala-p-Pasāda Suttaṃ

Devotion[1] to One Person

---

[196]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five disadvantages
of devotion to one person.

What five?

Monks, when a person
becomes very devoted to a person
and that person falls into an error such that the Order suspend him,
then he will think:

"The Order has suspended
him who is dear and lovely to me!"

And he will be no more
full of devotion for the monks,
and from being without that devotion
he will not follow other monks,
and from not following other monks
he will not hear Saddhamma,
and from not hearing Saddhamma
he will fall away from Saddhamma.

This, monks, is the first disadvantage
of devotion to one person.

▪

Or that person falls into an error such that the Order make him sit on the outskirts (of a gathering),
then he will think:

"The Order has made
him who is dear and lovely to me sit on the outskirts!"

And he will be no more
full of devotion for the monks,
and from being without that devotion
he will not follow other monks,
and from not following other monks
he will not hear Saddhamma,
and from not hearing Saddhamma
he will fall away from Saddhamma.

This, monks, is the second disadvantage
of devotion to one person.

▪

[197] Or when a person
becomes very devoted to a person
and that person is gone to a distant place,
then he will think:

"He is gone to a distant place,
he who was dear and lovely to me!"

And he will not follow other monks,
and from not following other monks
he will not hear Saddhamma,
and from not hearing Saddhamma
he will fall away from Saddhamma.

This, monks, is the third disadvantage
of devotion to one person.

▪

Or when a person
becomes very devoted to a person
and that person wanders[2] (in mind),
then he will think:

"He wanders,
he who was dear and lovely to me!"

And he will not follow other monks,
and from not following other monks
he will not hear Saddhamma,
and from not hearing Saddhamma
he will fall away from Saddhamma.

This, monks, is the fourth disadvantage
of devotion to one person.

▪

Or when a person
becomes very devoted to a person
and that person dies,
then he will think:

"He is dead,
he who was dear and lovely to me!"

And he will not follow other monks,
and from not following other monks
he will not hear Saddhamma,
and from not hearing Saddhamma
he will fall away from Saddhamma.

This, monks, is the fifth disadvantage
of devotion to one person.

Verily, monks, these are the five disadvantages
of devotion to one person.'

---

[1] Pasāda more lit. satisfaction, or faith.

[2] Vibbhanto.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 251-263

Sutta 251

Upasampādetabba Suttaṃ

Acceptance

---

[197]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, acceptance[1] ought to be granted
by a monk endowed with these five things.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of virtue
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of concentration
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of insight
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of emancipation
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of knowledge and vision of emancipation
with no need to train.[2]

Monks, acceptance ought to be granted
by a monk so endowed.'

---

[1] Upasampaādetabbaṃ: this is the second stage of monkhood; there is first the pabbajjā, the going forth, then the upasampadā, the acceptance or 'full orders' (both by and of the monk).

[2] Cf. Vin. i, 62 ff.; above, § 108.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 252

Nissaya Suttaṃ

Protection

---

[197]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, protection ought to be given
by a monk endowed with these five things.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of virtue
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of concentration
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of insight
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of emancipation
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of knowledge and vision of emancipation
with no need to train.

Monks, protection ought to be given
by a monk so endowed.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 253

Sāmaṇera Suttaṃ

Service

---

[197]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a novice ought to serve a monk endowed with these five things.

What five?

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of virtue
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of concentration
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of insight
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of emancipation
with no need to train.

▪

Herein, monks, the monk is endowed
with the whole body of knowledge and vision of emancipation
with no need to train.

Monks, a novice ought to serve a monk endowed with these five things.'

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 254

Macchariya Suttaṃ

Stinginess

---

[197]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these five forms of stinginess.[1]

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

[198] Verily, monks, there are these five.

Now the meanest of these five, monks, is this;
stinginess as to Dhamma."

---

[1] Cf. above, § 237

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 255

Macchariya-Pahāna Suttaṃ

The Godly Life

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, one lives the godly life by abandoning,
cutting off
these five forms of stinginess.

What five?

one lives the godly life by abandoning,
cutting off
stinginess as to one's lodging,
one lives the godly life by abandoning,
cutting off
stinginess as to family,

one lives the godly life by abandoning,
cutting off
stinginess as to gains,
one lives the godly life by abandoning,
cutting off
stinginess as to fame,
one lives the godly life by abandoning,
cutting off
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, one lives the godly life by abandoning,
cutting off
these five forms of stinginess."

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 256

Paṭhama-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Musing (first)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the first musing.[1]

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the first musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the first musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the first musing."

---

[1] Jhāna.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 257

Dutiya-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Musing (second)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the second musing.[1]

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the second musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the second musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the second musing."

---

[1] Jhāna.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 258

Tatiya-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Musing (third)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the third musing.[1]

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the third musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the third musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the third musing."

---

[1] Jhāna.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 259

Catuttha-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Musing (fourth)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the fourth musing.[1]

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the fourth musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the fourth musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the fourth musing."

---

[1] Jhāna.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 260

Sot'āpatti-Phalaṃ Suttaṃ

Untitled (The Fruit of Streamwinning)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Streamwinning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Streamwinning."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Streamwinning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Streamwinning."

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 261

Sakad-Āgāmi-Phalaṃ Suttaṃ

Untitled (The Fruit of Once-returning)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Once-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Once-returning."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Once-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Once-returning."

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 262

Anāgāmi-Phalaṃ Suttaṃ

Untitled (The Fruit of Non-returning)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Non-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Non-returning."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Non-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Non-returning."

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Sutta 263

Arahatta-Phalaṃ Suttaṃ

Untitled (The Fruit of Arahantship)

---

[198]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Arahantship.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Arahantship."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Arahantship.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
stinginess as to Dhamma.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Arahantship."

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 264-271

---

[198]

Suttas 264

Apara-Paṭhama-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Another[ed1] on Musing (first)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the first musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the first musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the first musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the first musing."

Suttas 265

Apara-Dutiya-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Another on Musing (second)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the second musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the second musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the second musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the second musing."

Suttas 266

Apara-Tatiya-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Another on Musing (third)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the third musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the third musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the third musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the third musing."

Suttas 267

Apara-Catuttha-j-Jhāna Suttaṃ

Another on Musing (fourth)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the fourth musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot enter and abide in the fourth musing."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the fourth musing.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can enter and abide in the fourth musing."

Suttas 268

Apara-Sot'āpatti-Phalaṃ Suttaṃ

Another Untitled (The Fruit of Streamwinning)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Streamwinning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Streamwinning."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Streamwinning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Streamwinning."

Suttas 269

Apara-Sakad'āgāmi-Phalaṃ Suttaṃ

Another Untitled (The Fruit of Once-returning)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Once-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Once-returning."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Once-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Once-returning."

Suttas 270

Apara-Anāgāmi-Phalaṃ Suttaṃ

Another Untitled (The Fruit of Non-returning)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Non-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize the fruit of Non-returning."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Non-returning.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize the fruit of Non-returning."

Suttas 271

Apara-Arahattaṃ Suttaṃ

Another Untitled (Arahantship)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize Arahantship.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandon not these five things,
one cannot realize Arahantship."

§

"Monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize Arahantship.

What five?

Stinginess as to one's lodging,
stinginess as to family,
stinginess as to gains,
stinginess as to fame,
ingratitude and benefits forgot.

Verily, monks, if one abandons these five things,
one can realize Arahantship."

---

ed1 See §§ 256-263.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 272-277[ed1]

Vaggātireka Suttāni

Discourses Extra to the Chapter

I. Agreed Upon Repetition Series

---

[198]

Suttas 272

Bhatt'Uddesaka Suttaṃ

The Food-Steward (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as a food-steward.

What five?

He[1] goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as a food-steward.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as a food-steward.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as a food-steward.

Suttas 273

Dutiya Bhatt'Uddesaka Suttaṃ

The Food-Steward (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as a food-steward,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as a food-steward,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as a food-steward,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as a food-steward,
he may be sent.

Suttas 274

Tatiya Bhatt'Uddesaka Suttaṃ

The Food-Steward (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward[ed2] follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 275

Catuttha Bhatt'Uddesaka Suttaṃ

The Food-Steward (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,

he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 276

Pañcama Bhatt'Uddesaka Suttaṃ

The Food-Steward (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

■

"Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows a ration from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is a food-steward follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

---

[1] See S.B.E. xx, 25 (Vin. Texts, iii); Vin. ii, 17ft; D. iii, 228; A. iv, 370.

[ed1] Hare has misnumbered this section. There is no #277. I have retained the numbering to eliminate possible confusion with references. Bhk. Bodhi has this whole section as one sutta, #272 which is probably the way it was originally intended. The Sutta numbering from here will not agree with the Wisdom Publications edition to the end of the Fives. The Index indicates the corresponding suttas.

ed2 Hare's translation/abridgement does not allow for this change.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 278-282

---

[199]

Sutta 278

Senāsana-Paññāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Allots Quarters (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who allots quarters.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who allots quarters.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who allots quarters.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who allots quarters.

Sutta 279

Dutiya Senāsana-Paññāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Allots Quarters (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who allots quarters,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who allots quarters,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who allots quarters,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who allots quarters,
he may be sent.

Sutta 280

Tatiya Senāsana-Paññāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Allots Quarters (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Sutta 281

Catuttha Senāsana-Paññāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Allots Quarters (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Sutta 282

Pañcama Senāsana-Paññāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Allots Quarters (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who allots quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 283-287

---

[199]

Suttas 283

Senāsanaggāhāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Receives Quarters (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who receives quarters.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who receives quarters.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who receives quarters.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who receives quarters.

Suttas 284

Dutiya Senāsanaggāhāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Receives Quarters (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who receives quarters,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who receives quarters,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who receives quarters,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who receives quarters,
he may be sent.

Suttas 285

Tatiya Senāsanaggāhāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Receives Quarters (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 286

Catuttha Senāsanaggāhāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Receives Quarters (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 287

Pañcama Senāsanaggāhāpaka Suttaṃ

He Who Receives Quarters (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows quarters from what is not quarters.

Monks, if a monk who is one who receives quarters follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 288-292

---

[199]

Suttas 288

Bhaṇḍāgārika Suttaṃ

The Store-keeper (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the store-keeper.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who is the store-keeper.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the store-keeper.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he may be selected as one who is the store-keeper.

Suttas 289

Dutiya Bhaṇḍāgārika Suttaṃ

The Store-keeper (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the store-keeper,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the store-keeper,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the store-keeper,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who is the store-keeper,
he may be sent.

Suttas 290

Tatiya Bhaṇḍāgārika Suttaṃ

The Store-keeper (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 291

Catuttha Bhaṇḍāgārika Suttaṃ

The Store-keeper (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 292

Pañcama Bhaṇḍāgārika Suttaṃ

The Store-keeper (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the store-keeper follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 293-297

---

[199]

Sutta 293

Cīvara-Paṭiggāhaka Suttaṃ

The Robes-receiver (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the robes-receiver.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who is the robes-receiver.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the robes-receiver.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he may be selected as one who is the robes-receiver.

Sutta 294

Dutiya Cīvara-Paṭiggāhaka Suttaṃ

The Robes-receiver (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the robes-receiver,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the robes-receiver,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the robes-receiver,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who is the robes-receiver,
he may be sent.

Sutta 295

Tatiya Cīvara-Paṭiggāhaka Suttaṃ

The Robes-receiver (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Sutta 296

Catuttha Cīvara-Paṭiggāhaka Suttaṃ

The Robes-receiver (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Sutta 297

Pañcama Cīvara-Paṭiggāhaka Suttaṃ

The Robes-receiver (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is guarded from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the robes-receiver follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 298-302

---

[199]

Suttas 298

Cīvara-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Robes (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out robes.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who metes out robes.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out robes.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out robes.

Suttas 299

Dutiya Cīvara-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Robes (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out robes,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out robes,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out robes,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out robes,
he may be sent.

Suttas 300

Tatiya Cīvara-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Robes (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 301

Catuttha Cīvara-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Robes (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 302

Pañcama Cīvara-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Robes (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out robes follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 303-307

---

[199]

Suttas 303

Yāgu-Bājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Gruel (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out gruel.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who metes out gruel.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out gruel.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out gruel.

Suttas 304

Dutiya Yāgu-Bājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Gruel (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out gruel,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out gruel,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out gruel,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out gruel,
he may be sent.

Suttas 305

Tatiya Yāgu-Bājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Gruel (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 306

Catuttha Yāgu-Bājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Gruel (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 307

Pañcama Yāgu-Bājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Gruel (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out gruel follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 308-312

---

[199]

Suttas 308

Phala-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Fruit (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out fruit.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who metes out fruit.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out fruit.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out fruit.

Suttas 309

Dutiya Phala-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Fruit (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out fruit,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out fruit,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out fruit,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out fruit,
he may be sent.

Suttas 310

Tatiya Phala-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Fruit (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 311

Catuttha Phala-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Fruit (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 312

Pañcama Phala-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Fruit (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out fruit follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 313-317

---

[199]

Suttas 313

Khajjaka-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Food (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food.

Suttas 314

Dutiya Khajjaka-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Food (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food,
he may be sent.

Suttas 315

Tatiya Khajjaka-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Food (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 316

Catuttha Khajjaka-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Food (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 317

Pañcama Khajjaka-Bhājaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Food (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 318-322

---

[199]

Suttas 318

Appamatta-kavissajjaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Small Things[1] (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food.

Suttas 319

Dutiya Appamatta-kavissajjaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Small Things (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who metes out food,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who metes out food,
he may be sent.

Suttas 320

Tatiya Appamatta-kavissajjaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Small Things (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 321

Catuttha Appamatta-kavissajjaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Small Things (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 322

Pañcama Appamatta-kavissajjaka Suttaṃ

He Who Metes Out Small Things (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

■

"Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is meted out from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who metes out food follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

---

[1] That is, needles, scissors, sandles, girdles, braces, etc.; see S.B.E. xx, 222.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 323-327

---

[199]

Suttas 323

Sāṭiya-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Undergarments (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken[1] from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

Suttas 324

Dutiya Sāṭiya-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Undergarments (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
he may be sent.

Suttas 325

Tatiya Sāṭiya-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Undergarments (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow
the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 326

Catuttha Sāṭiya-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Undergarments (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 327

Pañcama Sāṭiya-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Undergarments (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

■

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

---

[1] Hare does not translate. This is from P.E.D.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 328-332

---

[199]

Suttas 328

Patta-g-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Bowls (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken[1] from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments.

Suttas 329

Dutiya Patta-g-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Bowls (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who is the receiver of undergarments,
he may be sent.

Suttas 330

Tatiya Patta-g-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Bowls (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow
the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 331

Catuttha Patta-g-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Bowls (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 332

Pañcama Patta-g-gāhāpaka Suttaṃ

The Receiver of Bowls (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

■

"Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows what is taken from what is not.

Monks, if a monk who is one who is the receiver of undergarments follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

---

[1] Hare does not translate. This is from P.E.D.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 333-337

---

[199]

Suttas 333

Ārāmika-pesaka Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the Park-Keepers (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised [1] from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

Suttas 334

Dutiya Ārāmika-pesaka Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the Park-Keepers (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
he may be sent.

Suttas 335

Tatiya Ārāmika-pesaka Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the Park-Keepers (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 336

Catuttha Ārāmika-pesaka Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the Park-Keepers (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 337

Pañcama Ārāmika-pesaka Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the Park-Keepers (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

■

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

---

[1] Hare does not translate. This is from P.E.D.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 338-342

---

[199]

Suttas 338

Sāmaṇera-pesakaa Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the the Novices (1)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised [1] from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things, he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers.

Suttas 339

Dutiya Sāmaṇera-pesakaa Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the the Novices (2)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he ought not to be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
if selected,
he ought not to be sent.

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
if selected,
he may be sent.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he may be selected as one who looks after the park-keepers,
he may be sent.

Suttas 340

Tatiya Sāmaṇera-pesakaa Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the the Novices (3)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as a fool.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as insightful.

Suttas 341

Catuttha Sāmaṇera-pesakaa Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the the Novices (4)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,
he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one who goes about to hurt and injure himself.

▪

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,

he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one who does not go about to hurt and injure himself.

Suttas 342

Pañcama Sāmaṇera-pesakaa Suttaṃ

He Who Looks after the the Novices (5)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one as one whose reward will be hell.

What five?

He goes astray from wish,
he goes astray from hatred,

he goes astray from confusion,
he goes astray from fear,
and he knows not the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things, he ought to be known as one whose reward will be hell.

■

"Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

What five?

He does not go astray from wish,
he does not go astray from hatred,
he does not go astray from confusion,
he does not go astray from fear,
and he knows the supervised from the unsupervised.

Monks, if a monk who is one who looks after the park-keepers follow the course of these five things,
he ought to be known as one whose reward will be heaven.

---

[1] Hare does not translate. This is from P.E.D.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

The Fivefold

---

[199]

Sutta 343

Bhikkhu Suttaṃ

Monk

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,[ed1]
lies,

and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a monk follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a monk follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 344

Bhikkhunī Suttaṃ

Nun

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a nun follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into hell.

What five?

She takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a nun follow the course of these five things,
she will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a nun follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

She abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a nun follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 345

Sikkhamānā Suttaṃ

Those in Training

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a those in training follow the course of five things, they will be cast into hell.

What five?

They take life,
take what is not given,
lust after evil,
lie,
and live in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a those in training follow the course of these five things, they will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if those in training follow the course of five things, they will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

They abstain from taking life,
abstain from taking what is not given,
abstain from lusting after evil,
abstain from lying,
abstain from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if those in training follow the course of five things, they will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 346

Sāmaṇera Suttaṃ

Male Novice

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a male novice follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a male novice follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a male novice follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a male novice follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 347

Sāmaṇerī Suttaṃ

Female Novice

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a female novice follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into hell.

What five?

She takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a female novice follow the course of these five things,
she will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a female novice follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

She abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a female novice follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 348

Upāsaka Suttaṃ

Male Lay Disciple

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a male lay disciple follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a male lay disciple follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a male lay disciple follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a male lay disciple follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 349

Upāsikā Suttaṃ

Female Lay Disciple

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a female lay disciple follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into hell.

What five?

She takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a female lay disciple follow the course of these five things, she will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a female lay disciple follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

She abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,

abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a female lay disciple follow the course of five things,
she will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

[There is no PTS Sutta Number 350]

Sutta 351

Ājivaka Suttaṃ

The Ascetic[1]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if an ascetic follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if an ascetic follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if an ascetic follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if an ascetic follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 352

Nigaṇṭha Suttaṃ

The Jain[2]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if the Jain follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if the Jain follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if the Jain follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,

abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if the Jain follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 353

Muṇḍasāvaka Suttaṃ

The Shaveling[3]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a shaveling follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,

lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a shaveling follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a shaveling follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a shaveling follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 354

Jaṭilaka Suttaṃ

Him with Braided Hair[4]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if one with braided hair follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if one with braided hair follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if v follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if one with braided hair follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 355

Paribbājaka Suttaṃ

The Wanderer[5]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a wanderer follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a wanderer follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a wanderer follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a wanderer follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

---

[200]

Sutta 356

Māgandika Suttaṃ

The Follower of Magaṇḍa[6]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a follower of Maganḍa follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of Maganḍa follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a follower of Maganḍa follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of Maganḍa follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 357

Tedaṇḍika Suttaṃ

The Follower of the Sect of the Tripple Staff

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a follower of the sect of the triple staff follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of the sect of the triple staff follow the course of these five things,

he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a follower of the sect of the triple staff follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of the sect of the triple staff follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 358

Āruddhaka Suttaṃ

The Follower of the Unobstructed

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a follower of the unobstructed follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of the unobstructed follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a follower of the unobstructed follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of the unobstructed follow the course of five things,

he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 359

Gotamaka Suttaṃ

The Follower of the Sect of Gotama

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a follower of the sect of Gotama follow the course of five things, he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of the sect of Gotama follow the course of these five things,

he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a follower of the sect of Gotama follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of the sect of Gotama follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

Sutta 360

Devadhammika Suttaṃ

The Follower of Deva Rites[7]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a follower of deva rites follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into hell.

What five?

He takes life,
takes what is not given,
lusts after evil,
lies,
and lives in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of deva rites follow the course of these five things,
he will be cast into hell.'

▪

"Monks, if a follower of deva rites follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.

What five?

He abstains from taking life,
abstains from taking what is not given,
abstains from lusting after evil,
abstains from lying,
abstains from living in the idleness
of liquor and strong drink indulgence.

Verily, monks, if a follower of deva rites follow the course of five things,
he will be cast into heaven as the reward.'

---

[1] See Dial. i, 200 ff.; Thomas' Life, 197; Mrs. Rhys Davids' Gotama, 193. Comy. nagga-pabbajito.

[2] Comy. purima-bhāga-paṭicchanno.

[3] S.e. and Comy. Buḍḍha- for text muṇḍa-; Comy. explains: nigantha-sāvako.

[4] Comy. tāpaso.

[5] Comy. channa-paribbājako

[6] Of the others Comy. remarks: titthiyā eva. Our text reads magaṇḍiko, but S.e. and Comy. magandiko; maganda in Skt. means a usurer.

[7] Deva-dhammiko, or it may mean fatalist, a believer in luck (?).

[ed1] Hare has abridged nearly the whole of this sutta referencing § 145, but there, in the Pali, the third item is "Kāmesu micchā-cārī hoti" (and for the opposite "kāmesu micchā-cārā paṭivirato hoti" where as the Pali for this sutta has "abrahma-cārī hoti," and "abrahma-cariyā paṭivirato hoti". Hare translates "brahma-cāriya" as "Godly life."

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 361-410

2. Rāgā Peyyālaṃ

Passion (Repetition Series)

---

[200]

Sutta 361

Rāgassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 362

Rāgassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 363

Rāgassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 364

Rāgassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 365

Rāgassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 366

Rāgassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 367

Rāgassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 368

Rāgassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 369

Rāgassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 370

Rāgassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 371

Rāgassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 372

Rāgassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 373

Rāgassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 374

Rāgassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 375

Rāgassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 376

Rāgassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 377

Rāgassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 378

Rāgassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 379

Rāgassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 380

Rāgassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 381

Rāgassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 382

Rāgassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 383

Rāgassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 384

Rāgassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 385

Rāgassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 386

Rāgassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 387

Rāgassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 388

Rāgassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 389

Rāgassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 390

Rāgassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 391

Rāgassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 392

Rāgassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 393

Rāgassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 394

Rāgassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 395

Rāgassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 396

Rāgassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 397

Rāgassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 398

Rāgassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 399

Rāgassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 400

Rāgassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 401

Rāgassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 402

Rāgassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 403

Rāgassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 404

Rāgassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 405

Rāgassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 406

Rāgassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 407

Rāgassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 408

Rāgassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 409

Rāgassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Passion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 410

Rāgassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Passion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of passion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddh'indriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 361-400

2. Dosa Peyyālaṃ

Hatred (Repetition Series)

---

[201]

Sutta 411

Dosassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 412

Dosassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 413

Dosassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 414

Dosassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 415

Dosassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 416

Dosassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 417

Dosassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 418

Dosassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 419

Dosassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 420

Dosassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 421

Dosassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 422

Dosassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 423

Dosassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 424

Dosassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 425

Dosassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 426

Dosassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 427

Dosassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 428

Dosassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 429

Dosassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 430

Dosassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 431

Dosassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 432

Dosassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 433

Dosassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 434

Dosassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 435

Dosassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 436

Dosassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 437

Dosassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 438

Dosassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 439

Dosassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 440

Dosassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 441

Dosassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 442

Dosassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 443

Dosassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 444

Dosassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 445

Dosassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 446

Dosassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 447

Dosassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 448

Dosassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 449

Dosassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 450

Dosassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 451

Dosassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 452

Dosassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 453

Dosassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 454

Dosassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 455

Dosassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 456

Dosassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 457

Dosassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 458

Dosassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 459

Dosassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Hatred 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 460

Dosassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Hatred 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc.

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 461-510

2. Moha Peyyālaṃ

Illusion (Repetition Series)

Sutta 461

Mohassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 462

Mohassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 463

Mohassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 464

Mohassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 465

Mohassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 466

Mohassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 467

Mohassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 468

Mohassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 469

Mohassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 470

Mohassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 471

Mohassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 472

Mohassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 473

Mohassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 474

Mohassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 475

Mohassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 476

Mohassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 477

Mohassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 478

Mohassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 479

Mohassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 480

Mohassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 481

Mohassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 482

Mohassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 483

Mohassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 484

Mohassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 485

Mohassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 486

Mohassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 487

Mohassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 488

Mohassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 489

Mohassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 490

Mohassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 491

Mohassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 492

Mohassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 493

Mohassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 494

Mohassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 495

Mohassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 496

Mohassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 497

Mohassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 498

Mohassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 499

Mohassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 500

Mohassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 501

Mohassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 502

Mohassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 503

Mohassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 504

Mohassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 505

Mohassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 506

Mohassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 507

Mohassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 508

Mohassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 509

Mohassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Illusion 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 510

Mohassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Illusion 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of illusion
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of illusion
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 511-560

2. Kodha Peyyālaṃ

Anger (Repetition Series)

Sutta 511

Kodhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 512

Kodhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 513

Kodhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 514

Kodhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 515

Kodhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 516

Kodhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 517

Kodhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 518

Kodhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 519

Kodhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 520

Kodhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 521

Kodhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 522

Kodhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 523

Kodhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 524

Kodhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 525

Kodhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 526

Kodhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 527

Kodhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 528

Kodhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 529

Kodhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 530

Kodhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 531

Kodhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 532

Kodhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 533

Kodhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 534

Kodhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 535

Kodhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 536

Kodhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 537

Kodhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 538

Kodhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 539

Kodhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 540

Kodhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 541

Kodhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 542

Kodhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 543

Kodhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 544

Kodhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 545

Kodhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 546

Kodhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 547

Kodhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 548

Kodhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 549

Kodhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 550

Kodhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 551

Kodhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 552

Kodhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 553

Kodhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 554

Kodhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 555

Kodhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 556

Kodhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Anger 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 557

Kodhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Anger 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 558

Kodhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Anger 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 559

Kodhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Anger 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 560

Kodhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Anger 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of anger
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of anger
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 561-610

2. Upanāha Peyyālaṃ

Enmity (Repetition Series)

Sutta 561

Upanāhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 562

Upanāhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 563

Upanāhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 564

Upanāhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 565

Upanāhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 566

Upanāhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 567

Upanāhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 568

Upanāhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 569

Upanāhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 570

Upanāhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 571

Upanāhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 572

Upanāhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 573

Upanāhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 574

Upanāhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 575

Upanāhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 576

Upanāhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 577

Upanāhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 578

Upanāhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 579

Upanāhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 580

Upanāhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 581

Upanāhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 582

Upanāhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 583

Upanāhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 584

Upanāhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 585

Upanāhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 586

Upanāhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 587

Upanāhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 588

Upanāhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 589

Upanāhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 590

Upanāhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 591

Upanāhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 592

Upanāhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 593

Upanāhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 594

Upanāhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 595

Upanāhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 596

Upanāhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 597

Upanāhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 598

Upanāhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 599

Upanāhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 600

Upanāhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 601

Upanāhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 602

Upanāhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 603

Upanāhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 604

Upanāhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 605

Upanāhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 606

Upanāhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Enmity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 607

Upanāhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Enmity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 608

Upanāhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Enmity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 609

Upanāhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Enmity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 610

Upanāhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Enmity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of enmity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of enmity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 611-660

2. Makkha Peyyālaṃ

Hypocrisy (Repetition Series)

Sutta 611

Makkhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 612

Makkhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 613

Makkhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 614

Makkhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 615

Makkhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 616

Makkhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 617

Makkhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 618

Makkhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 619

Makkhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 620

Makkhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 621

Makkhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 622

Makkhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 623

Makkhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 624

Makkhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 625

Makkhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 626

Makkhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 627

Makkhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 628

Makkhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 629

Makkhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 630

Makkhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 631

Makkhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 632

Makkhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 633

Makkhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 634

Makkhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 635

Makkhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 636

Makkhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 637

Makkhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 638

Makkhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 639

Makkhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 640

Makkhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 641

Makkhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 642

Makkhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 643

Makkhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 644

Makkhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 645

Makkhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 646

Makkhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 647

Makkhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 648

Makkhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 649

Makkhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 650

Makkhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 651

Makkhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 652

Makkhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 653

Makkhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 654

Makkhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 655

Makkhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 656

Makkhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Hypocrisy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 657

Makkhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Hypocrisy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 658

Makkhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Hypocrisy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 659

Makkhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Hypocrisy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 660

Makkhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Hypocrisy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of hypocrisy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 661-710

2. Paḷāsa Peyyālaṃ

Malice (Repetition Series)

Sutta 661

Paḷāsassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 662

Paḷāsassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 663

Paḷāsassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 664

Paḷāsassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 665

Paḷāsassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 666

Paḷāsassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 667

Paḷāsassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 668

Paḷāsassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 669

Paḷāsassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 670

Paḷāsassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 671

Paḷāsassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 672

Paḷāsassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 673

Paḷāsassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 674

Paḷāsassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 675

Paḷāsassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 676

Paḷāsassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 677

Paḷāsassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 678

Paḷāsassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 679

Paḷāsassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 680

Paḷāsassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 681

Paḷāsassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 682

Paḷāsassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 683

Paḷāsassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 684

Paḷāsassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 685

Paḷāsassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 686

Paḷāsassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 687

Paḷāsassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 688

Paḷāsassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 689

Paḷāsassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 690

Paḷāsassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 691

Paḷāsassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 692

Paḷāsassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 693

Paḷāsassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 694

Paḷāsassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 695

Paḷāsassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 696

Paḷāsassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 697

Paḷāsassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 698

Paḷāsassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 699

Paḷāsassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 700

Paḷāsassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 701

Paḷāsassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 702

Paḷāsassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 703

Paḷāsassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 704

Paḷāsassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 705

Paḷāsassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 706

Paḷāsassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Malice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 707

Paḷāsassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Malice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 708

Paḷāsassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Malice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 709

Paḷāsassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Malice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 710

Paḷāsassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Malice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of malice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of malice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 711-760

2. Issā Peyyālaṃ

Envy (Repetition Series)

Sutta 711

Issāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 712

Issāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 713

Issāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 714

Issāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 715

Issāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 716

Issāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 717

Issāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 718

Issāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 719

Issāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 720

Issāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 721

Issāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 722

Issāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 723

Issāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 724

Issāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 725

Issāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 726

Issāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 727

Issāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 728

Issāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 729

Issāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 730

Issāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 731

Issāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 732

Issāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 733

Issāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 734

Issāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 735

Issāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 736

Issāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 737

Issāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 738

Issāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 739

Issāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 740

Issāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 741

Issāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 742

Issāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 743

Issāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 744

Issāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 745

Issāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 746

Issāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 747

Issāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 748

Issāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 749

Issāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 750

Issāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 751

Issāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 752

Issāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 753

Issāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 754

Issāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 755

Issāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 756

Issāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Envy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 757

Issāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Envy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 758

Issāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Envy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 759

Issāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Envy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 760

Issāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Envy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of envy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of envy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 761-810

2. Macchariya Peyyālaṃ

Avarice (Repetition Series)

Sutta 761

Macchariyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 762

Macchariyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 763

Macchariyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 764

Macchariyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 765

Macchariyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 766

Macchariyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 767

Macchariyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 768

Macchariyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 769

Macchariyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 770

Macchariyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 771

Macchariyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 772

Macchariyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 773

Macchariyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 774

Macchariyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 775

Macchariyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 776

Macchariyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 777

Macchariyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 778

Macchariyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 779

Macchariyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 780

Macchariyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 781

Macchariyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 782

Macchariyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 783

Macchariyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 784

Macchariyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 785

Macchariyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 786

Macchariyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 787

Macchariyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 788

Macchariyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 789

Macchariyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 790

Macchariyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 791

Macchariyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 792

Macchariyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 793

Macchariyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 794

Macchariyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 795

Macchariyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 796

Macchariyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 797

Macchariyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 798

Macchariyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 799

Macchariyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 800

Macchariyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 801

Macchariyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 802

Macchariyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 803

Macchariyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 804

Macchariyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 805

Macchariyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 806

Macchariyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Avarice 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 807

Macchariyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Avarice 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 808

Macchariyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Avarice 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 809

Macchariyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Avarice 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 810

Macchariyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Avarice 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of avarice
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of avarice
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 811-860

2. Māyā Peyyālaṃ

Deceit (Repetition Series)

Sutta 811

Māyāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 812

Māyāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 813

Māyāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 814

Māyāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 815

Māyāya Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 816

Māyāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 817

Māyāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 818

Māyāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 819

Māyāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 820

Māyāya Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 821

Māyāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 822

Māyāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 823

Māyāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 824

Māyāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 825

Māyāya Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 826

Māyāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 827

Māyāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 828

Māyāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 829

Māyāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 830

Māyāya Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 831

Māyāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 832

Māyāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 833

Māyāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 834

Māyāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 835

Māyāya Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 836

Māyāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 837

Māyāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 838

Māyāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 839

Māyāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 840

Māyāya Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 841

Māyāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 842

Māyāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 843

Māyāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 844

Māyāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 845

Māyāya Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 846

Māyāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 847

Māyāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 848

Māyāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 849

Māyāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 850

Māyāya Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 851

Māyāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 852

Māyāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 853

Māyāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 854

Māyāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 855

Māyāya Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 856

Māyāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Deceit 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 857

Māyāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Deceit 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 858

Māyāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Deceit 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 859

Māyāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Deceit 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 860

Māyāya Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Deceit 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of deceit
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of deceit
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 861-910

2. Sāṭheyya Peyyālaṃ

Craftiness (Repetition Series)

Sutta 861

Sāṭheyyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 862

Sāṭheyyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 863

Sāṭheyyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 864

Sāṭheyyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 865

Sāṭheyyassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 866

Sāṭheyyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 867

Sāṭheyyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 868

Sāṭheyyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 869

Sāṭheyyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 870

Sāṭheyyassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 871

Sāṭheyyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 872

Sāṭheyyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 873

Sāṭheyyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 874

Sāṭheyyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 875

Sāṭheyyassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 876

Sāṭheyyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 877

Sāṭheyyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 878

Sāṭheyyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 879

Sāṭheyyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 880

Sāṭheyyassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 881

Sāṭheyyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 882

Sāṭheyyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 883

Sāṭheyyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 884

Sāṭheyyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 885

Sāṭheyyassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 886

Sāṭheyyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 887

Sāṭheyyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 888

Sāṭheyyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 889

Sāṭheyyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 890

Sāṭheyyassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 891

Sāṭheyyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 892

Sāṭheyyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 893

Sāṭheyyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 894

Sāṭheyyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 895

Sāṭheyyassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 896

Sāṭheyyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 897

Sāṭheyyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 898

Sāṭheyyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 899

Sāṭheyyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 900

Sāṭheyyassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 901

Sāṭheyyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 902

Sāṭheyyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 903

Sāṭheyyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 904

Sāṭheyyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 905

Sāṭheyyassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 906

Sāṭheyyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Craftiness 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 907

Sāṭheyyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Craftiness 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 908

Sāṭheyyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Craftiness 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 909

Sāṭheyyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Craftiness 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 910

Sāṭheyyassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Craftiness 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of craftiness
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 911-960

2. Thambha Peyyālaṃ

Obstinacy (Repetition Series)

Sutta 911

Thambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 912

Thambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 913

Thambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 914

Thambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 915

Thambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 916

Thambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 917

Thambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 918

Thambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 919

Thambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 920

Thambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 921

Thambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 922

Thambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 923

Thambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 924

Thambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 925

Thambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 926

Thambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 927

Thambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 928

Thambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 929

Thambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 930

Thambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 931

Thambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 932

Thambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 933

Thambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 934

Thambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 935

Thambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 936

Thambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 937

Thambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 938

Thambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 939

Thambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 940

Thambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 941

Thambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 942

Thambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 943

Thambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 944

Thambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 945

Thambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 946

Thambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 947

Thambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 948

Thambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 949

Thambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 950

Thambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 951

Thambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 952

Thambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 953

Thambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 954

Thambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 955

Thambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 956

Thambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Obstinacy 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 957

Thambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Obstinacy 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 958

Thambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Obstinacy 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 959

Thambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Obstinacy 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 960

Thambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Obstinacy 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of obstinacy
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 961-1010

2. Sārambha Peyyālaṃ

Impetuosity (Repetition Series)

Sutta 961

Sārambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 962

Sārambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 963

Sārambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 964

Sārambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 965

Sārambhassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 966

Sārambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 967

Sārambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 968

Sārambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 969

Sārambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 970

Sārambhassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 971

Sārambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 972

Sārambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 973

Sārambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 974

Sārambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 975

Sārambhassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 976

Sārambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 977

Sārambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 978

Sārambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 979

Sārambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 980

Sārambhassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 981

Sārambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 982

Sārambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 983

Sārambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 984

Sārambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 985

Sārambhassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 986

Sārambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 987

Sārambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 988

Sārambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 989

Sārambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 990

Sārambhassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 991

Sārambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 992

Sārambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 993

Sārambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 994

Sārambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 995

Sārambhassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 996

Sārambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 997

Sārambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 998

Sārambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 999

Sārambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1000

Sārambhassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1001

Sārambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1002

Sārambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1003

Sārambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1004

Sārambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1005

Sārambhassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1006

Sārambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Impetuosity 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1007

Sārambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Impetuosity 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1008

Sārambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Impetuosity 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1009

Sārambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Impetuosity 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1010

Sārambhassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Impetuosity 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of impetuosity
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 1011-1060

2. Māna Peyyālaṃ

Pride (Repetition Series)

Sutta 1011

Mānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1012

Mānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1013

Mānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1014

Mānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1015

Mānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1016

Mānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1017

Mānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1018

Mānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1019

Mānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1020

Mānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1021

Mānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1022

Mānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1023

Mānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1024

Mānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1025

Mānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1026

Mānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1027

Mānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1028

Mānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1029

Mānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1030

Mānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1031

Mānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1032

Mānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1033

Mānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1034

Mānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1035

Mānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1036

Mānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1037

Mānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1038

Mānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1039

Mānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1040

Mānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1041

Mānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1042

Mānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1043

Mānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1044

Mānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1045

Mānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1046

Mānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1047

Mānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1048

Mānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1049

Mānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1050

Mānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1051

Mānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1052

Mānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1053

Mānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1054

Mānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1055

Mānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1056

Mānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Pride 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1057

Mānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Pride 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1058

Mānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Pride 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1059

Mānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Pride 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1060

Mānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Pride 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of pride
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of pride
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 1061-1110

2. Atimāna Peyyālaṃ

Arrogance (Repetition Series)

Sutta 1061

Atimānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1062

Atimānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1063

Atimānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1064

Atimānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1065

Atimānassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1066

Atimānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1067

Atimānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1068

Atimānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1069

Atimānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1070

Atimānassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1071

Atimānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1072

Atimānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1073

Atimānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1074

Atimānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1075

Atimānassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1076

Atimānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1077

Atimānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1078

Atimānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1079

Atimānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1080

Atimānassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1081

Atimānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1082

Atimānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1083

Atimānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1084

Atimānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1085

Atimānassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1086

Atimānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1087

Atimānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1088

Atimānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1089

Atimānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1090

Atimānassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1091

Atimānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1092

Atimānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1093

Atimānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1094

Atimānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1095

Atimānassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1096

Atimānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1097

Atimānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1098

Atimānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1099

Atimānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1100

Atimānassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1101

Atimānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1102

Atimānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1103

Atimānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1104

Atimānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1105

Atimānassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1106

Atimānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Arrogance 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1107

Atimānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Arrogance 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1108

Atimānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Arrogance 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1109

Atimānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Arrogance 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1110

Atimānassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Arrogance 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of arrogance
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 1111-1160

2. Mada Peyyālaṃ

Intoxication (Repetition Series)

Sutta 1111

Madassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1112

Madassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1113

Madassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1114

Madassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1115

Madassa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1116

Madassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1117

Madassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1118

Madassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1119

Madassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1120

Madassa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1121

Madassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1122

Madassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1123

Madassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1124

Madassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1125

Madassa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1126

Madassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1127

Madassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1128

Madassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1129

Madassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1130

Madassa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1131

Madassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1132

Madassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1133

Madassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1134

Madassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1135

Madassa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1136

Madassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1137

Madassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1138

Madassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the decay of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1139

Madassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1140

Madassa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1141

Madassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1142

Madassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1143

Madassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1144

Madassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1145

Madassa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1146

Madassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1147

Madassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1148

Madassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the ending of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1149

Madassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1150

Madassa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1151

Madassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1152

Madassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1153

Madassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1154

Madassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1155

Madassa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1156

Madassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Intoxication 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1157

Madassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Intoxication 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1158

Madassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Intoxication 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1159

Madassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Intoxication 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1160

Madassa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Intoxication 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of intoxication
these five things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc. I

Aṅguttara-Nikāya
Pañcaka-Nipāta
26. Upasampadā Vagga

The Book of the Fives

Chapter XXVI: Acceptance

Suttas 1161-1210

2. Pamāda Peyyālaṃ

Indolence (Repetition Series)

Sutta 1161

Pamādasssa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 1

Full Understanding of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1162

Pamādasssa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 2

Full Understanding of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1163

Pamādasssa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 3

Full Understanding of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1164

Pamādasssa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 4

Full Understanding of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by[1] faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1165

Pamādasssa Abhiññāya Suttaṃ 5

Full Understanding of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the full understanding of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1166

Pamādasssa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 1

Comprehension of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1167

Pamādasssa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 2

Comprehension of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1168

Pamādasssa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 3

Comprehension of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1169

Pamādasssa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 4

Comprehension of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1170

Pamādasssa Pariññāya Suttaṃ 5

Comprehension of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the comprehension indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1171

Pamādasssa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 1

Exhaustion of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1172

Pamādasssa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 2

Exhaustion of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1173

Pamādasssa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 3

Exhaustion of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of dispassion.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1174

Pamādasssa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 4

Exhaustion of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1175

Pamādasssa Parikkhayāya Suttaṃ 5

Exhaustion of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the exhaustion of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1176

Pamādasssa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 1

Abandoning of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1177

Pamādasssa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 2

Abandoning of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1178

Pamādasssa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 3

Abandoning of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1179

Pamādasssa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 4

Abandoning of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,

the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1180

Pamādasssa Pahānāya Suttaṃ 5

Abandoning of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,

the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the abandoning of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1181

Pamādasssa Khayāya Suttaṃ 1

Destruction of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,

of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1182

Pamādasssa Khayāya Suttaṃ 2

Destruction of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1183

Pamādasssa Khayāya Suttaṃ 3

Destruction of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1184

Pamādasssa Khayāya Suttaṃ 4

Destruction of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1185

Pamādasssa Khayāya Suttaṃ 5

Destruction of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the destruction of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1186

Pamādasssa Vayāya Suttaṃ 1

Decay of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1187

Pamādasssa Vayāya Suttaṃ 2

Decay of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the decay of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1188

Pamādasssa Vayāya Suttaṃ 3

Decay of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the decay of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1189

Pamādasssa Vayāya Suttaṃ 4

Decay of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1190

Pamādasssa Vayāya Suttaṃ 5

Decay of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the decay of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1191

Pamādasssa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Freedom from Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1192

Pamādasssa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Freedom from Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1193

Pamādasssa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Freedom from Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1194

Pamādasssa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Freedom from Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1195

Pamādasssa Virāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Freedom from Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the freedom from indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1196

Pamādasssa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 1

Ending of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1197

Pamādasssa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 2

Ending of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,

of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the ending of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1198

Pamādasssa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 3

Ending of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,

of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the ending of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1199

Pamādasssa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 4

Ending of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1200

Pamādasssa Nirodhāya Suttaṃ 5

Ending of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the ending of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1201

Pamādasssa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 1

Quittance of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1202

Pamādasssa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 2

Quittance of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1203

Pamādasssa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 3

Quittance of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1204

Pamādasssa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 4

Quittance of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1205

Pamādasssa Cāgāya Suttaṃ 5

Quittance of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the quittance of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 1206

Pamādasssa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 1

Renunciation of Indolence 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of the unattractive,
of death,
of perils,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1207

Pamādasssa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 2

Renunciation of Indolence 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The thought of impermanence,
of no-self,
of death,
of the cloying of food,
of there being no real joy in the whole world.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1208

Pamādasssa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 3

Renunciation of Indolence 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

Of impermanence,
of ill in impermanence,
of there being no-self in ill,
of renunciation,
of indolence.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1209

Pamādasssa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 4

Renunciation of Indolence 4

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 1210

Pamādasssa Paṭinissaggāya Suttaṃ 5

Renunciation of Indolence 5

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī;
and there he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Yes, lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of indolence
five things ought to be made to become.

What five?

The governance by faith,
the governance by energy,
the governance by mindfulness,
the governance by concentration
the governance by insight.

Verily, monks, for the renunciation of indolence
these five things ought to be made to become.'[2]

---

[1] Indriya: — saddhindriya, etc.

[2] This formula recurs at A. i, 100, 299; ii, 257; iii, 278, 452; iv, 148, 349, 456; v, 310, in respect of 'two' dhammā: things, conditions or qualities and so forth to 'eleven.' Sometimes the editors of the Roman texts show the formula as though one sutta were intended - e.g., A. i, 100 - and sometimes as above with the abbreviation mark. I venture to suggest that there are 4,250 suttas intended with this formula, thus: (17 X 10)X 1, 1, 3, 5, 3, 3, 3, 2, 3, and 1 respectively, and that the statement at the end of A. v, p. 361, that the Anguttara Nikāya contains 9,557 - and this is confirmed in the Comys. AA. i, 3 and DA. i, 23, also Exp. i, 32 - is not far short of the mark, pace Hardy, A. v, p. vi.

Namo tassa Bhagavato arahato sammā-sambuddhassa

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 1

Paṭhamā Huneyya Suttaṃ

Worthy of Offerings (a)

---

[202]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a monk who follows six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

Monks,[1] herein a monk on seeing a form with the eye

is neither elated nor depressed,
but abides in poise,[2]
mindful and self-possessed;

▪

on hearing a sound with the ear
is neither elated nor depressed,
but abides in poise,
mindful and self-possessed;

▪

on smelling a smell with the nose
is neither elated nor depressed,
but abides in poise,
mindful and self-possessed;

▪

on tasting a taste with the tongue
is neither elated nor depressed,
but abides in poise,
mindful and self-possessed;

▪

on touching a touchable with the body
is neither elated nor depressed,
but abides in poise,
mindful and self-possessed;

▪

on becoming aware of an idea with the mind
is neither elated nor depressed,

but abides in poise,
mindful and self-possessed.

Verily, monks, a monk who follows these six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

Thus spoke the Exalted One;
and with their hearts lifted up those monks rejoiced exceedingly in the word of the Exalted One.

---

[1] Cf. D. iii, 281; M. iii, 240; A. v, 30; ii, 198

[2] Comy. observes that this state is not from want of noticing the object nor from not knowing about it, but from composure.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 2

Dutiya Huneyya Suttaṃ

Worthy of Offerings (b)

---

[202]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a monk who follows six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

Monks, herein a monk experiences psychic power in manifold [203] modes
-

Being one,
he becomes many;
being many,
he becomes one;
he becomes visible or invisible;
goes without let
through walls,
through fences,
through mountains,
as if they were but air;
he dives in and out of the earth,
as if it were but water;
he walks on water
without parting it,
as if it were earth;
he travels cross-legged through the air,
as a bird on the wing;
he handles and strokes the moon and the sun,
though they be so powerful and strong;
he scales the heights of the world
even in this body -

▪

With the celestial means of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he hears sounds
both of devas and mankind,
both far and near -

▪

By mind compassing mind[1] he knows
the thoughts of other beings,
other persons;
he knows the passionate mind as such,

the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the malignant mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the infatuated mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the congested mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the diffuse mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the lofty mind as such,
the low mind as such;
he knows the better mind as such,
the inferior mind as such;
he knows the controlled mind as such,
the uncontrolled as such;
he knows the liberated mind as such,
the mind not freed as such -

▪

He remembers previous lives[2],
that is to say,
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each,
such was my name,
such my clan,

such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
that faring on thence
I arose there,
when such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
faring on thence
I arose here;
thus he calls to mind
each detail and circumstance
of my many previous dwellings -

▪

With the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he sees beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
he sees them pass
according to their works;
thus these worthies
were given over to evil ways
in deed,
word

and thought,
defamers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
reaping the reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in hell,
the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
or,
those acted rightly
in deed,
word
and thought,
they were no defamers of the Ariyans,
but held right views
and reaped their reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in heaven,
that happy place of bliss;
thus, with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he sees beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
he sees them pass
according to their works -

▪

By destroying the cankers
enters and abides
in the canker-free mind-emancipation,
insight-emancipation,
realizing this here and now
entirely by his own knowledge.[3]

Verily, monks, a monk who follows these six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

---

[1] Cetasā ceto paricca.

[2] Literally previous dwellings ('Life' in Pali has no plural).

[3] The text abbreviates to some extent; see above V, § 23. [Ed.: here fully unabridged adapting this version.]

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 3

Indriya Suttaṃ

Faculties

---

[203]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a monk who follows six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

The faculty[1] of faith,
the faculty of energy,

the faculty of mindfulness,
the faculty of concentration,
the faculty of insight;
destroying the cankers,
he enters and abides
in the canker-free mind-emancipation,
insight-emancipation,
realizing this here and now
entirely by his own knowledge.

Verily, monks, a monk who follows these six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

---

[1] Indriya, or 'governance,' p. 200; see D. iii, 239 for the five.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 4

Bala Suttaṃ

Powers

---

[203]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a monk who follows six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

The power of faith,
the power of energy,

the power of mindfulness,
the power of concentration,
the power of insight;
destroying the cankers,
he enters and abides
in the canker-free mind-emancipation,
insight-emancipation,
realizing this here and now
entirely by his own knowledge.

Verily, monks, a monk who follows these six things is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 5

Paṭhama Ājānīya Suttaṃ

The Thoroughbred (a)

---

[203]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] a rajah's goodly thoroughbred endowed with six points
is fit for a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

What six?

Herein, monks, the goodly thoroughbred
endures forms,

sounds,
smells,
tastes,
touches,
and has beauty.

Monks, a rajah's thoroughbred
with these six points
is fit for a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

§

Even so monks, a monk with six qualities
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

[204] Herein, monks, a monk endures[2] forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes,
touches
and things of the mind.

Verily, monks, a monk with these six qualities
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,

worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

---

[1] Cf. above V, § 139.

[2] Cf. above V, § 85.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 6

Dutiya Ājānīya Suttaṃ

The Thoroughbred (b)

---

[204]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a rajah's goodly thoroughbred
endowed with six points
is fit for a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

What six?

Herein, monks, the goodly thoroughbred
endures forms,

sounds,
smells,
tastes,
touches,
and has strength.

Monks, a rajah's thoroughbred
with these six points
is fit for a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

§

Even so monks, a monk with six qualities
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk endures forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes,
touches
and things of the mind.

Verily, monks, a monk with these six qualities
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,

worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 7

Tatiya Ājānīya Suttaṃ

The Thoroughbred (c)

---

[204]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a rajah's goodly thoroughbred
endowed with six points
is fit for a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

What six?

Herein, monks, the goodly thoroughbred
endures forms,

sounds,
smells,
tastes,
touches,
and has speed.

Monks, a rajah's thoroughbred
with these six points
is fit for a rajah,
is a rajah's asset,
is reckoned a rajah's portion.

§

Even so monks, a monk with six qualities
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk endures forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes,
touches
and things of the mind.

Verily, monks, a monk with these six qualities
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,

worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 8

Anuttariya Suttaṃ

Above All

[ ]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these six are above all.[1]

What six?

The sight above all;
the sound above all;
the gain above all;
the training above all;
the service above all;
the ever minding above all.

Verily, monks, these six are above all.'

---

[1] Anuttariyāni, no higher states; see below, § 30, for details; D. iii, 250, 281; below, § 121; [? Ed.: but 152] cf. M. i, 235; D. iii, 219.

[ed1] See also: [AN 5.170] Bhaddaji Suttaṃ, the Pali, Bhaddaji, the E.M. Hare translation.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 9

Anussatiṭṭhāna Suttaṃ

Ever Minding[1]

---

[204]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these six states of ever minding.

What-six?

The ever minding of the Buddha;
the ever minding of Dhamma;
the ever minding of the Order;
the ever minding of virtue;
the ever minding of liberality;
the ever minding of the devas.

Monks, these are the six states of ever minding.'

---

[1] Anu-s-sati, Vism. Ch. vii, 'Recollections'; below, § 25; D. iii, 250; A. i, 207 (G.S. i, 187ff.); A. v, 329 ff.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
I: Āhuneyya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter I: The Worthy

Sutta 10

Mahānāma Suttaṃ

Mahānāma

---

[204]

Thus have I heard:

Once, while the Exalted One was dwelling near Kapilavatthu in Banyan Tree Park,
there came to him Mahānāma,[1] the Sakya, who saluted
and sat down at one side.

So seated,
Mahānāma, the Sakya, said this
to the Exalted One:

[205] 'Lord,[2] the Ariyan disciple who has won the fruit,[3]
grasped the message,
what life lives he in abundance?'

§

'Mahānāma,[4] the Ariyan disciple who has won the fruit,
grasped the message,
lives this life in abundance:

The Ariyan disciple, Mahānāma, is ever minding the Tathāgata:

"He is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
perfected in knowledge and way of life,
one well-gone,
a knower of the worlds,
none higher,
a tamer of tamable men,
a teacher,
the awake among devas and men,
the Exalted One!"

▪

Mahānāma, what time the Ariyan disciple minds the Tathāgata,
his heart is never overwhelmed[5] by passion,
never overwhelmed by hatred,
never overwhelmed by infatuation;
then, verily, is the way of his heart made straight
because of the Tathāgata.

▪

And with his heart's ways straightened, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple becomes zealous[6] of the goal,
zealous of Dhamma,
wins the joy that is linked to Dhamma;
and of his joy
zest is born;

when his mind is rapt in zest,
his whole[7] being becomes calm;
calm in being,
he experiences ease;
and of him that dwells at ease
the heart is composed.

▪

Mahānāma, of this Ariyan disciple it is said:

Among uneven folk he lives evenly;[8]
among troubled folk he lives untroubled;
[206] with the ear for Dhamma won,
he makes become
the ever minding of the Buddha.

§

Again, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple
is ever minding Dhamma:

"Well declared by the Exalted One is Dhamma,
a view for this life,
nor for this only,[9]
bidding come and see,
a guide,
to be known by the wise
each for himself."

▪

Mahānāma, what time the Ariyan disciple minds Dhamma,
his heart is never overwhelmed by passion,
never overwhelmed by hatred,
never overwhelmed by infatuation;
then, verily, is the way of his heart made straight because of the Dhamma.

▪

And with his heart's ways straightened, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple becomes zealous of the goal,
zealous of Dhamma,
wins the joy that is linked to Dhamma;
and of his joy
zest is born;
when his mind is rapt in zest,
his whole being becomes calm;
calm in being,
he experiences ease;
and of him that dwells at ease
the heart is composed.

Of him it is said:

Among uneven folk he lives evenly;
among troubled folk he lives untroubled;
with the ear for Dhamma won,
he makes become the ever minding of the Dhamma.

§

Again, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple
is ever minding the Order:

"The Exalted One's Order of disciples
has rightly stepped the way,
has straightly stepped the way,
has fitly stepped the way,
has wholly stepped the way,
that is:
the four pairs among men,
the eight persons among mankind;
and this Order of disciples of the Exalted One
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit."

▪

Mahānāma, what time the Ariyan disciple minds the Order
his heart is never overwhelmed by passion,
never overwhelmed by hatred,
never overwhelmed by infatuation;
then, verily, is the way of his heart made straight because of the Order.

▪

And with his heart's ways straightened, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple becomes zealous of the goal,
zealous of Dhamma,
wins the joy that is linked to Dhamma;
and of his joy
zest is born;
when his mind is rapt in zest,
his whole being becomes calm;
calm in being,
he experiences ease;

and of him that dwells at ease
the heart is composed.

Of him it is said:

Among uneven folk he lives evenly;
among troubled folk he lives untroubled;
with the ear for Dhamma won,
he makes become the ever minding of the Order.

§

Again, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple is ever minding the virtues in the self:

"They are unbroken,
without a flaw,
spotless,
without blemish;
they bring freedom
and are praised by wise men;
they are incorruptible
and lead to concentration."[10]

▪

Mahānāma, what time the Ariyan disciple minds virtue in the self
his heart is never overwhelmed by passion,
never overwhelmed by hatred,
never overwhelmed by infatuation;
then, verily, is the way of his heart made straight because of the virtues in the self.

▪

And with his heart's ways straightened, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple becomes zealous of the goal,
zealous of Dhamma,
wins the joy that is linked to Dhamma;
and of his joy
zest is born;
when his mind is rapt in zest,
his whole being becomes calm;
calm in being,
he experiences ease;
and of him that dwells at ease
the heart is composed.

[207] Of him it is said:

Among uneven folk he lives evenly;
among troubled folk he lives untroubled;
with the ear for Dhamma won,
he makes become the ever minding of virtue.

§

Again, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple is ever minding liberality in the self:

"It is indeed a gain for me,
indeed I have greatly gained,
I who among folk, overwhelmed by the taint of stinginess,
live the home-life heart-free of the stingy taint,
giving freely,
open-hand¢d,

loving bounty,
within reach of all,
finding joy in alms-distribution."

▪

Mahānāma, what time the Ariyan disciple minds liberality in the self
his heart is never overwhelmed by passion,
never overwhelmed by hatred,
never overwhelmed by infatuation;
then, verily, is the way of his heart made straight because of liberality in the self.

▪

And with his heart's ways straightened, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple becomes zealous of the goal,
zealous of Dhamma,
wins the joy that is linked to Dhamma;
and of his joy
zest is born;
when his mind is rapt in zest,
his whole being becomes calm;
calm in being,
he experiences ease;
and of him that dwells at ease
the heart is composed.

Of him it is said:

Among uneven folk he lives evenly;
among troubled folk he lives untroubled;
with the ear for Dhamma won,
he makes become the ever minding of liberality.

§

Then, Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple makes become the ever minding of the devas:

"There are the Four Royal devas,
there are the devas of the Thirty,
the Yama devas,
the Tusita devas,
the devas who delight in creating,
the devas who have power over others' creations,
the Brahma-world devas,[11]
and there are the devas beyond that;
because their faith was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such faith;
because their virtue was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such virtue;
because their learning was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such learning;
because their liberality was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such liberality;
because their wisdom was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such wisdom.'

▪

Mahānāma, what time the Ariyan disciple minds both in himself
and in those devas

faith,
virtue,
learning,
liberality
and wisdom,
his heart is never overwhelmed by passion,
never overwhelmed by hatred,
never overwhelmed by infatuation;
then, verily, is the way of his heart made straight because of the devas.

▪

And with his heart's ways straightened, Mahānāma,
the Ariyan disciple becomes zealous of the goal,
zealous of Dhamma,
wins the joy that is linked to Dhamma;
and of his joy
zest is born;
when his mind is rapt in zest,
his whole being becomes calm;
calm in being,
he experiences ease;
and of him that dwells at ease
the heart is composed.

Of him it is said:

Among uneven folk he lives evenly;
among troubled folk he lives untroubled;
[208] with the ear for Dhamma won,
he makes become the ever minding of the devas.

Mahānāma, the Ariyan disciple who has won the fruit,
grasped the message,
lives this life in abundance.'

---

[1] Comy. the B.'s first cousin: see Vin. Texts iii, 224 (S.B.E. xx).

[2] See the references to this sutta at Vism. trsl. 257 ff. The items in the discourse closely follow those in the talk with Visākhā, G.S. i, pp. 185-195, the three sorts of feast-day keeping there replaced here by the six Anussatis only.

[3] Āgata-phalo viññāta-sāsano. I cannot trace these compounds elsewhere in the four Nikāyas. Our - Comy., observes: Ariya-phalaṃ assa agatan-ti and Sikkhā-ttaya-sāaamṃ etena viññātan-ti They recur, however, at Mhvs. xiv, 27 (trsl. p. 93), and the ṭīkā therein (Colombo ed., 1895, p. 233) observes: Ettha tatiya-phale ṭhitatta ariya-maggena āgata-anāgāmi-phalo-ti, and Ariya-maggen'eva suṭṭhu vijānita-sambuddha-sāsano.

[4] According to our Comy., and Vism. M. was a Streamwinner.

[5] Pariyuṭṭhita.

[6] Attha-vedaṃ, dhamma-vedaṃ. Comy. says veda is the pīti-pāmojjan that arises in respect of aṭṭha-kathā and Pāḷi. See Vism. trsl. 281. We see this late scholastic interpretation in Nyanatiloka's rendering: 'understanding of exposition and of law.'

[7] Kāya. Comy. nāma- ca karaja- ca.

[8] With Comy., S.e. and v.l. we should read sama-ppatto; the former explains: aamaṃ upasamaṃ patto hutvā

[9] Sanṇdiṭṭhiko akāliko, etc.; cf. 'Everyman, I will go with thee,' etc. Cf. below, § 47. Akāliko, lit. 'not-time-ish,' means for life in other worlds reckoned by kalpa, not kāla. Cf. Sakya, p. 413.

[10] S.e. reads samādhi-saṃvattanikānī-ti.

[11] Devā Brahma-kāyikā.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 11

Paṭhama Sārāṇīya Suttaṃ

On Being Considerate (a)

---

[208]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are six ways of being considerate.[1]

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk's part is amity in deed towards his fellows in the godly life,[2]
openly and in private;
verily, this is a way of being considerate.

■

Again, his part is amity in word,
towards his fellows in the godly life,
openly and in private;
verily, this also is a way of being considerate.

▪

Then, those proper gains, gotten according to rule -
be they but bowl-scraps -
he loves to share them impartially,[3]
to have them in common
with his virtuous fellows in the godly life;
this also is a way of being considerate.

▪

And those virtues that are unbroken,
without flaw,
spotless,
without blemish,
bringing freedom,
praised by wise men,
incorruptible,
leading to concentration -
he dwells one in virtue with them
among his fellows in the godly life,
openly and in private;
this also is a way of being considerate.

▪

And that Ariyan view,
saving,
leading him who acts accordantly
to the utter destruction of Ill -

he dwells one in view with that
among his fellows in the godly life,
openly and in private;
this also is a way of being considerate.

Verily, monks, these are the six ways of being considerate.'

---

[1] Sārāṇīyā, lit. 'that ought to be remembered.' Comy. sāritabba-yuttakā, as at J. iv, 99; see D. ii, 80; iii, 245; M. i, 322.

[2] Brahma-cārīsu.

[3] Appaṭi-vibhatta-bhogī Comy. āmisa-, puggala-paṭivibhattañ ca.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 12

Dutiya Sārāṇīya Suttaṃ

On Being Considerate (b)

---

[208]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are six ways of being considerate, which endear,
bring honour,
lead to concord,
banish contention,
lead to unity,
lead to singleness of heart.

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk's part is amity in deed
towards his fellows in the godly life,
openly and in private;
verily, this is a way of being considerate,
which endears,
brings honour,
leads to concord,
banishes contention,
leads to unity,
leads to singleness of heart.

▪

Again, his part is amity in word,
towards his fellows in the godly life,
openly and in private;
verily, this also is a way of being considerate,
which endears,
brings honour,
leads to concord,
banishes contention,
leads to unity,
leads to singleness of heart.

▪

Then, those proper gains,
gotten according to rule -
be they but böwl scraps -
he loves to share them impartially,
to have them in common
with his virtuous fellows in the godly life;
this also is a way of being considerate,
which endears,
brings honour,
leads to concord,

banishes contention,
leads to unity,
leads to singleness of heart.

▪

And those virtues that are unbroken,
without flaw,
spotless,
without blemish,
bringing freedom,
praised by wise men,
incorruptible,
leading to concentration -
he dwells one in virtue with them
among his fellows in the godly life,
openly and in private;
this also is a way of being considerate,
which endears,
brings honour,
leads to concord,
banishes contention,
leads to unity,
leads to singleness of heart.

▪

And that Ariyan view,
saving,
leading him who acts accordantly
to the utter destruction of Ill -
he dwells one in view with that
among his fellows in the godly life,
openly and in private;
this also is a way of being considerate,
which endears,

brings honour,
leads to concord,
banishes contention,
leads to unity,
leads to singleness of heart.

Verily, monks, these are the six ways of being considerate, which endear,
bring honour,
lead to concord,
banish contention,
lead to unity,
lead to singleness of heart.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 13

Nissāraṇīya Suttaṃ

Amity

---

[209]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these six factors whereby should be escape.[1]

What six?

Monks, suppose a monk were to say this:

Of a truth, I have made mind-emancipation become by amity,
made an increase of it,
made a vehicle of it,

made a home of it,
dwelt with it,
gathered it together,
set it well going:
yet ill-will invades my heart and stays!"

Speak to him and say:

"Go to now,
speak not so, reverend sir,
distort not the word of the Exalted One!

Ill it is
to distort his word thus.[2]

Verily, the Exalted One would never speak so;
it is not possible, sir,
nor could it happen,
that when mind-emancipation is made become by amity,
made an increase of,
made a vehicle of,
made a home of,
dwelt with,
gathered together
and set well going,
ill-will can invade one's heart and stay.

It is not possible.

Indeed, sir,[3]
this is just the escape from ill-will,
I mean,
mind-emancipation by amity."

▪

Or suppose a monk were to say this:

"Of a truth, I have made mind-emancipation become by pity,
made an increase of it,
made a vehicle of it,
made a home of it,
dwelt with it,
gathered it together,
set it well going:
yet fell thoughts invade my heart and stay!"

Speak to him and say:

"Go to now,
speak not so, reverend sir,
distort not the word of the Exalted One!

Ill it is
to distort his word thus.

Verily, the Exalted One would never speak so;
it is not possible, sir,
nor could it happen,
that when mind-emancipation is made become by pity,
made an increase of,
made a vehicle of,
made a home of,
dwelt with,
gathered together
and set well going,
fell thoughts can invade one's heart and stay.

It is not possible.

Indeed, sir
this is just the escape from fell thoughts,
I mean,
mind-emancipation by pity."

▪

Or suppose a monk were to say this:

"Of a truth, I have made mind-emancipation become by (kindly) joy,
made an increase of it,
made a vehicle of it,
made a home of it,
dwelt with it,
gathered it together,
set it well going:
yet enmity invades my heart and stays!"

Speak to him and say:

"Go to now,
speak not so, reverend sir,
distort not the word of the Exalted One!

Ill it is
to distort his word thus.

Verily, the Exalted One would never speak so;
it is not possible, sir,
nor could it happen,
that when mind-emancipation is made become by (kindly) joy,
made an increase of,
made a vehicle of,
made a home of,
dwelt with,
gathered together
and set well going,
enmity can invade one's heart and stay.

It is not possible.

Indeed, sir
this is just the escape from enmity,
I mean,
mind-emancipation by (kindly) joy."

▪

Or suppose a monk were to say this:

"Of a truth, I have made mind-emancipation become by poise,
made an increase of it,
made a vehicle of it,
made a home of it,
dwelt with it,
gathered it together,
set it well going:
yet passion invades my heart and stays!"

Speak to him and say:

"Go to now,
speak not so, reverend sir,
distort not the word of the Exalted One!

Ill it is
to distort his word thus.

Verily, the Exalted One would never speak so;
it is not possible, sir,
nor could it happen,
that when mind-emancipation is made become by poise,
made an increase of,
made a vehicle of,
made a home of,
dwelt with,
gathered together

and set well going,
passion can invade one's heart and stay.

It is not possible.

Indeed, sir
this is just the escape from passion,
I mean,
mind-emancipation by poise."

▪

Or suppose a monk were to say this:

"Of a truth, I have made mind-emancipation become by the signless[4],
made an increase of it,
made a vehicle of it,
made a home of it,
dwelt with it,
gathered it together,
set it well going:
yet my thoughts run after [210] signs!"[5]

Speak to him and say:

"Go to now,
speak not so, reverend sir,
distort not the word of the Exalted One!

Ill it is
to distort his word thus.

Verily, the Exalted One would never speak so;
it is not possible, sir,
nor could it happen,
that when mind-emancipation is made become by the signless,
made an increase of,

made a vehicle of,
made a home of,
dwelt with,
gathered together
and set well going,
that one's thoughts can run after signs.

It is not possible.

Indeed, sir
this is just the escape from all signs,
I mean,
mind-emancipation by the signless."

▪

Or suppose a monk were to say this:

"I am free[6] of the thought 'I am,' nor do I perceive within me
the thought 'This I am'
yet the dart[7] of doubt and questioning
'How, how?'
invades my heart and stays!"

"Go to now,
speak not so, reverend sir,
distort not the word of the Exalted One!

Ill it is
to distort his word thus.

Verily, the Exalted One would never speak so;
it is not possible, sir,
nor could it happen,
that when one is free of the thought 'I am'
and sees not within one

the thought 'This I am,'
the dart of doubt and questioning
'How, how?'
can invade the heart and stay.

It is not possible.

Indeed, sir, this is just the escape from the dart of doubt and questioning,
I mean,
the complete rooting out of the conceit
'I am'"

Verily, monks, these are the six factors whereby should be escape.'

---

[1] Cf. D. iii, 247 for all this; Expos. 259.

[2] This passage is stock; cf. M. i, 130; iii, 207.

[3] Āvuso; so the monk is still addressing his fellow-monk, though -ti is omitted. However, D. iii reads āvuso throughout for our bhikkhave.

[4] A-nimitta. Comy. it is so called because the passion, form and permanence signs become not; see K.S. i, 239 n.; Cpd. 211, n.

[5] Me nimittānusāri viññāṇaṃ hoti.

[6] S.e. and Comy. read with the text vigataṃ; D. iii, vighātaṃ.

[7] Dial. iii, 233 accepts the variant sallāpaṃ, debating; but all our readings are sallaṃ; cf. also D. ii, 283.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 14

Bhaddaka Suttaṃ

The Lucky Fate

---

[210]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

There the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sir!'

'Yes, friend,' they replied.

Then said the venerable Sāriputta:

'The more, reverend sirs, a monk thus fashions his life,
the more he fashions it to a luckless death,[1]
a luckless fate.[2]

And how, reverend sirs,
does a monk fashion his life
to a luckless death,
a luckless fate?

Consider, reverend sirs,
the monk who,[3]
finding delight in worldly activity,[4]
is delighted with worldly activity,
gets engrossed in the delight of worldly activity;

▪

who, finding delight in talk,
is delighted with talk,
gets engrossed in the delight of talk;

▪

who, finding delight in sleep,
is delighted with sleep,
gets engrossed in the delight of sleep;

▪

who, finding delight in company,
is delighted with company,
gets engrossed in the delight of company;

▪

who, finding delight in companionship
is delighted with companionship,
gets engrossed in the delight of companionship;

▪

who, finding delight in vain fancies[5] -
is delighted with vain fancies,
gets engrossed in the delight of vain fancies;

▪

[211] and thus, reverend sirs,
the more he so fashions his life,
the more he fashions it to a luckless death,
a luckless fate;
and of this monk it is said:

'With his bundle of life[6]
he is greatly delighted;
he has not got rid of his bundle
for the utter ending of Ill.'

But the more, reverend sirs,
a monk fashions his life in this manner,
the more he fashions it to a lucky death,
a lucky fate.

§

And how, reverend sirs,
does a monk fashion his life
to a lucky death,
a lucky fate?

Consider the monk who,
finding no delight in worldly activity,
is not delighted therewith,
gets not engrossed in the delight thereof;

▪

who, finding no delight in talk,
is not delighted with talk,
gets not engrossed in the delight of talk;

▪

who, finding no delight in sleep,
is not delighted with sleep,
gets not engrossed in the delight of sleep;

▪

who, finding no delight in company,
is not delighted with company,
gets not engrossed in the delight of company;

▪

who, finding no delight in companionship
is not delighted with companionship,
gets not engrossed in the delight of companionship;

▪

who, finding no delight in vain fancies -
is not delighted with vain fancies,
gets not engrossed in the delight of vain fancies;

▪

and thus the more he so fashions his life,
the more he fashions it to a lucky[7] death,
a lucky fate;
and of him it is said:

'With Nibbāna he is greatly delighted;
he has got rid of his bundle of life
for the utter ending of Ill.'

Fancy[8]-ensnared, fawn-like[9] too fancy-fond, Ne'er wins he blest Nibbāna's boundless peace:[10] But fancy-rid, intent on freedom's way,

He wins to blest Nibbāna's boundless peace.'

---

[1] Na bhaddakaṃ. Comy. na laddhakaṃ.

[2] Kāla-kiriyā; cf. A. i, 261 (G.S. i, 240).

[3] Cf. above V, § 89; A. iv, 331.

[4] Kamma.

[5] Papañca, or obsessions, or diffuseness. See Brethr. 343 n.

[6] Sa-k-kāyābhirato; kāya is from √ci, a heap or collection; Comy. says te-bhūmaka-vaṭṭaṃ. (Cf. the Biblical use of 'the bundle of life.' at 1 Samuel xxv, 29.) The sa- stresses the kāya of things material.

[7] Bhaddaka.

[8] These verses recur at Thag. 989-90 (Brethr. 343) as part of Sāriputta's aññā declaration.

[9] Mago.

[10] Yoga-kkhema, rest from labour; cf. kshema-yoga.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 15

Anutappa Suttaṃ

Without Remorse

---

[211]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Sāriputta was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

There the venerable Sāriputta addressed the monks, saying:

'Reverend sir!'

'Yes, friend,' they replied.

Then said the venerable Sāriputta:

'The more, reverend sirs, a monk thus fashions his life,
the more he fashions it to a remorseful fate.

And how, reverend sirs,
does a monk fashion his life
to a remorseful fate?

Consider, reverend sirs,
the monk who,
finding delight in worldly activity,

is delighted with worldly activity,
gets engrossed in the delight of worldly activity;

▪

who, finding delight in talk,
is delighted with talk,
gets engrossed in the delight of talk;

▪

who, finding delight in sleep,
is delighted with sleep,
gets engrossed in the delight of sleep;

▪

who, finding delight in company,
is delighted with company,
gets engrossed in the delight of company;

▪

who, finding delight in companionship
is delighted with companionship,
gets engrossed in the delight of companionship;

▪

who, finding delight in vain fancies -
is delighted with vain fancies,
gets engrossed in the delight of vain fancies;
and thus, reverend sirs,
the more he so fashions his life,
the more he fashions it to a remorseful fate;
and of this monk it is said:

With his bundle of life
he is greatly delighted;
he has not got rid of his bundle
for the utter ending of Ill.|| ||

§

But the more, reverend sirs,
a monk fashions his life in this manner,
the more he fashions it to a fate without remorse.

And how, reverend sirs,
does a monk fashion his life
to a fate without remorse?

Consider the monk who,
finding no delight in worldly activity,
is not delighted therewith,
gets not engrossed in the delight thereof;

▪

who, finding no delight in talk,
is not delighted with talk,
gets not engrossed in the delight of talk;

▪

who, finding no delight in sleep,
is not delighted with sleep,
gets not engrossed in the delight of sleep;

▪

who, finding no delight in company,
is not delighted with company,
gets not engrossed in the delight of company;

▪

who, finding no delight in companionship
is not delighted with companionship,
gets not engrossed in the delight of companionship;

▪

who, finding no delight in vain fancies -
is not delighted with vain fancies,
gets not engrossed in the delight of vain fancies;
and thus the more he so fashions his life,
the more he fashions it to a fate without remorse;
and of him it is said:

With Nibbāna he is greatly delighted;
he has got rid of his bundle of life
for the utter ending of Ill.

Fancy-ensnarled, fawn-like too fancy-fond,
Ne'er wins he blest Nibbāna's boundless peace:
But fancy-rid, intent on freedom's way,
He wins to blest Nibbāna's boundless peace.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 16

Nakula-Pitu Suttaṃ

Nakula's Parents

---

[211]

Thus have I heard:

Once, while the Exalted One was dwelling among the Bhaggis on Crocodile Hill in the Deer Park at Bhesakaḷā [212] Grove,
the goodman of the house,
Nakula's father,[1] lay sick sad ailing,
grievously ill.

Now his dame, Nakula's mother,[2] spoke thus to him:

'I prithee, goodman, die not fretfully;[3]
ill is the fate of the fretful;
decried by the Exalted One
is the fate of the fretful.

▪

Maybe, goodman, you think:

"Alas, when I am gone,
the goodwife, Nakula's mother,

will not be able[4] to support the children, nor keep the household together!"[5]

But think not so, goodman;
for I am deft at spinning cotton,
at carding[6] the matted wool;
and I can support the children,
keep the household,
after you have gone.

Wherefore, goodman,
die not fretfully;
ill is the fate of the fretful;
decried by the Exalted One
is the fate of the fretful.

▪

Or maybe you think:

"The goodwife, when I am gone, will go to another man!"[7]

But think not so, goodman;
for you and I know how for sixteen years
we have lived, as housefolk,
the godly life.[8]

Wherefore, goodman,
die not fretfully;
ill is the fate of the fretful;
decried by the Exalted One
is the fate of the fretful.

▪

Or maybe you think:

"The goodwife, after I am gone,
will have no desire to see the Exalted One, no desire to see the monks of the Order!"

But think not so, goodman;
for, verily, when you are gone, greater shall be my desire to see the Exalted One greater shall be my desire to see the Order.[9]

Wherefore, goodman,
die not fretfully;
ill is the fate of the fretful;
decried by the Exalted One
is the fate of the fretful.

▪

Or maybe you think:

"The goodwife, after I am gone, will not keep the virtues in full!"

But think not so, goodman;
[213] so long as the Exalted One shall have white-robed women lay disciples, folk with homes,
who keep the virtues in full,
I shall be one of them;
and if any shall doubt or deny it,
let him go and ask the Exalted One,
that Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
who dwells here among the Bhaggis

on Crocodile Hill
in the Deer Park at Bhesakaḷā Grove.

Wherefore, goodman,
die not fretfully;
ill is the fate of the fretful;
decried by the Exalted One
is the fate of the fretful.

▪

Or maybe you think:

"The goodwife, will not gain the calm of heart within herself!"

But think not so, goodman;
for so long as the Exalted One shall have white-robed women lay-disciples who gain the calm of heart within,
I shall be one of them;
and if any shall doubt or deny it,
let him go and ask the Exalted One,
that Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
who dwells here among the Bhaggis
on Crocodile Hill
in the Deer Park at Bhesakaḷā Grove.

Wherefore, goodman,
die not fretfully;
ill is the fate of the fretful;
decried by the Exalted One
is the fate of the fretful.

▪

Or maybe you think:

"The goodwife, Nakula's mother,
will not, in this Dhamma and discipline,
win to the firm ground,[10]
win a firm foothold,[11]
win comfort,
dissolve doubt,
be freed of uncertainty,
win confidence,
become self-reliant,[12]
live in the Teacher's word!"

But think not so, goodman;
for so long as the Exalted One shall have white-robed women lay-disciples,
folk with homes,
who, in this Dhamma and discipline,
win to the firm ground,
win a firm foothold,
win comfort,
dissolve doubt,
become freed of uncertainty,
win confidence,
become self-reliant
and live in the Teacher's word,
I shall be one of them;
and if any shall doubt or deny it,
let him go and ask the Exalted One,
that Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
who dwells here among the Bhaggis
on Crocodile Hill
in the Deer Park at Bhesakaḷā Grove.

Wherefore, goodman,
die not fretfully;
ill is the fate of the fretful;

decried by the Exalted One
is the fate of the fretful.

§

Now while the goodman was being counselled with this counsel by Nakula's mother,
even as he lay there,[13]
his sickness subsided;
and Nakula's father arose from that sickness.

And thus that sickness was laid aside by the goodman of the house.

§

[214] Now, not long after he had got up, Nakula's father, on a stick,
visited the Exalted Ohe,
saluted him,
and sat down at one side.

And to him, thus seated, the Exalted One said this:

'It has been to your gain, goodman,
you have greatly gained, goodman,
in having had the goodwife, Nakula's mother,
full of compassion,
and desiring (your) weal,

as a counsellor,
as a teacher.

Verily, so long as I have white-robed women lay-disciples,
folk with homes,
who keep the virtues in full,
the goodwife, Nakula's mother,
will be one of them;

▪

verily, so long as I have white-robed women lay-disciples,
folk with homes,
who gain the calm of heart within the self,
the goodwife, Nakula's mother,
will be one of them;

▪

verily, so long as I have white-robed women lay-disciples,
folk with homes,
who, in this Dhamma and discipline,
win a firm foothold,
win comfort,
dissolve doubt,
become freed of uncertainty,
win confidence,
become self-reliant
and live in the Teacher's word,
the goodwife will be one of those.

It has been to your gain, goodman,
you have greatly gained, goodman,
in having had the goodwife, Nakula's mother,
full of compassion,
and desiring (your) weal,

as a counsellor,
as a teacher.

---

[1] Cf. K.S. iii, 1; G.S. i, 24; AA. i, 400.

[2] G.S. i, 25; AA. i, 457; A. iv, 268.

[3] Sāpekho. Comy. sa-taṇho.

[4] Comy. reads sakkhati, S.e. -issati.

[5] Santharituṃ, to spread; but here the Comy. nicchiddaṃ kātuṃ, saṇṭhapetuṃ, pavattetun-ti attho. P.E.D. omits nicchiddaṃ.

[6] Veṇiṃ olikhituṃ. Comy. eḷaka-lomāni kappetvā, vijaṭetvā, veṇiṃ kātuṃ.

[7] The text reads gharaṃ, but we should read, with v.l., S.e. and Comy., vīraṃ.

[8] Brahma-cariya. Cf. above, p. 159, n. 2.

[9] Comy. observes that with these three items 'she roared her lion-roar'; but as to the last three she called the B. to witness.

[10] Ogādha-ppattā. Comy. ogādhaṃ anupavesaṃ pattā; cf. UdA. 345.

[11] Paṭigādha-. Comy. ... patiṭṭhaṃ pattā.

[12] This is stock; D. i, 110; Vin. i, 12; Ud. 49.

[13] Ṭhānaso.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 17

Kusala Suttaṃ

Right Things[1]

---

[214]

Thus have I heard:

On one occasion, while he dwelt near Sāvatthī
at Jeta Grove in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
the Exalted One,
rising from solitude at eventide,
approached the service hall;[2]
and, on arriving,
sat down on the seat ready there.

Then, too, the venerable Sāriputta,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Mahā Moggallāna,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Mahā Kaccāna,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Koṭṭhita,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Mahā Cunda,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Mahā Kappina,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Anuruddha,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Revata,
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

Then, too, the venerable Ānanda[3],
rising from solitude at eventide,
went to the service hall,
saluted the Exalted One,
and sat down at one side.

§

[215] Now, after passing much of the night thus seated, the Exalted One rose and entered the dwelling.

And soon after he had gone,
the venerable monks also rose and went,
each to his dwelling;
but the novices,
not long gone forth,
newly come to this Dhamma-discipline,
went on snoring[4] and sleeping there, even till sunrise.

▪

And the Exalted One,
seeing with the deva eye,
surpassing the purity of man's,
those monks snoring and sleeping till sunrise, went to the service hall and sat down;
and being seated,
addressed them,
saying:

"Monks, where is Sāriputta;
where is Maha Moggallāna;

where is Mahā Kassapa,
where is Mahā Kaccāna,
where is Mahā Koṭṭhita,
where is Mahā Cunda,
where is Mahā Kappina,
where is Anuruddha,
where is Revata,
where is Ānanda?

Where have these elder-disciples gone, monks?'

▪

'Lord, they, too,
soon after the Exalted One's departure, rose and went,
each to his dwelling.'

▪

"Monks, then are you now elders, yet novice-like
you sleep and snore till sunrise!

What think you, monks,
have you either seen or heard of a warrior rajah,
crowned and anointed,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;

and ruling all his life,
the darling and favourite of the country-folk?

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I seen or heard of a warrior rajah,
crowned and anointed,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
and ruling all his life,
the darling and favourite of the country-folk.

▪

And have you seen or heard of a farmer,[5ed1]
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
farming all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings?'

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I seen or heard of a farmer,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
farming all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings.

▪

And have you seen or heard of a land-owner's son[6],
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
managing his lands all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings?'

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I seen or heard of a land-owner's son,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
managing his lands all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings.

▪

And have you seen or heard of a general,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
leading an army all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings?'

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I seen or heard of a general,
living a life of indulgence,

given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
leading an army all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings.

▪

And have you seen or heard of a village headman,[7]
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
governing a village all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings?'

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I seen or heard of a village headman,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
governing a village all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings.

▪

And have you seen or heard of a guild master,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth

to his heart's content;
mastering his guild all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings?'

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I seen or heard of a guild master,
living a life of indulgence,
given over to the pleasures bed,
indolence
and sloth
to his heart's content;
mastering his guild all his life,
the darling and favourite of his underlings.

▪

Then have you seen or heard of a recluse or godly man[8]
indulging himself to his heart's content
in the pleasures of [216] bed,
indolence
and sloth,
with sense-doors unguarded,
knowing no moderation in eating,
not practising vigilance,
no seer of right things,
nor practising the practice -
day in day out -
of making become
things that wing to his awakening;[9]
yet, having destroyed the cankers
and being canker-free,
entering and abiding in mind-emancipation,
in insight-emancipation
and realizing it,

here now,
by his own knowledge?'

'No indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I seen or heard
of a recluse or godly man
indulging himself to his heart's content
in the pleasures of bed,
indolence
and sloth,
with sense-doors unguarded,
knowing no moderation in eating,
not practising vigilance,
no seer of right things,
nor practising the practice -
day in day out -
of making become
things that wing to his awakening;
yet, having destroyed the cankers
and being canker-free,
entering and abiding in mind-emancipation,
in insight-emancipation
and realizing it,
here now,
by his own knowledge.

Wherefore, monks, train yourselves thus:

We will become guarded as to the sense-doors,
know moderation in eating,
be practised in vigilance,
seers of right things,
and dwell -
day in day out -

practising the practice of making become things that wing to our awakening.

Verily, monks, train yourselves thus.'

---

[1] The text of the uddāna for both §§ 16 and 17 reads Nakula maccha ... ; S.e. Nakula-kusalā macchaṃ ...

[2] Upaṭṭhāna-sālā, lit. attendance-hall

[3] For all these, except Mahā Cunda, see G.S. i, 16 [and] and ref. there; for Mahā Cunda see below, § 46.

[4] Kākacchamānā. Comy. kāka-saddaṃ karontā, dante khadantā (gnashing teeth, as a sleeping infant often does).

[5] Cf. above V, § 58. Comy. here: yo raṭṭhaṃ bhuñjati.

[6] Gāma-gāmiko. Comy. gāma-bhojako, landlord.

[7] Brāhmaṇa.

[8] Cf. above V, § 56.

[9] Comy. the thirty-seven; see Buddhist Suttas, p. 62, [?] Vism. trsl. 832, and elsewhere. Originally, most likely thirty. Cf. K.S. v, Contents and Introduction.

[ed1] Hare, the PTS Pali, Bhk. Bodhi and the CSCD all abridge the following sections down to the name of the group. The BJT version I have appears to have begun an expanded version but left it mid-way. I have expanded both the Pali and Hare's translation inventing the appropriate changes in as close an alignment with Hare's vocabulary as I could manage.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 18

Macchika Suttaṃ

The Fish[1]

---

[216]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One
with a great company of monks
walked a walk among the Kosalese,
he saw, as he went along the highway,
a fisherman,
who had caught a haul of fish
and was selling them as a fishmonger;
and the Exalted One at the sight stepped off the road
and sat down at the foot of a tree on a seat made ready for him.

And, sitting there, he said to the monks:

"Monks, see you that fisherman who has caught a haul of fish and is selling them as a fishmonger?

'Yes, lord.'

'Then what think you, monks,
have you either seen or heard
of a fisherman fishmonger
slaughtering and selling fish;
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant[2]
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
[217]or feasting at feasts[3]
or living in the abundance of great wealth?

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I either seen or heard
of a fisherman fishmonger
slaughtering and selling fish;
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth.

And why is that?

Verily, monks, evilly minded
he gloats on fish being slaughtered,
being brought to the slaughter;
and because of that
he goes not about on an elephant
nor on horseback

nor in a chariot
nor carriage
nor feasts at feasts
nor lives in the abundance of great wealth.

▪

What think you, monks,
have you either seen or heard
of a butcher slaughtering and selling cattle;
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth?

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I
either seen or heard
of a butcher slaughtering and selling cattle
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth.

And why is that?

Verily, monks, evilly minded
he gloats on cattle being slaughtered,

being brought to the slaughter;
and because of that
he goes not about on an elephant
nor on horseback
nor in a chariot
nor carriage
nor feasts at feasts
nor lives in the abundance of great wealth.

▪

What think you, monks,
have you either seen or heard
of a butcher slaughtering and selling rams;
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth?

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I
either seen or heard
of a butcher slaughtering and selling rams
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth.

And why is that?

Verily, monks, evilly minded
he gloats on rams being slaughtered,
being brought to the slaughter;
and because of that
he goes not about on an elephant
nor on horseback
nor in a chariot
nor carriage
nor feasts at feasts
nor lives in the abundance of great wealth.

▪

What think you, monks,
have you either seen or heard
of a butcher slaughtering and selling pigs;
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth?

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I
either seen or heard
of a butcher slaughtering and selling pigs
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback

or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth.

And why is that?

Verily, monks, evilly minded
he gloats on pigs being slaughtered,
being brought to the slaughter;
and because of that
he goes not about on an elephant
nor on horseback
nor in a chariot
nor carriage
nor feasts at feasts
nor lives in the abundance of great wealth.

▪

What think you, monks,
have you either seen or heard
of a butcher slaughtering and selling beasts of the forest[4];
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth?

'No, indeed, lord.'

'Well, monks, neither have I
either seen or heard

of a butcher slaughtering and selling beasts of the forest
and as a result of such deeds,
of that way of living,
going about on an elephant
or on horseback
or in a chariot
or carriage
or feasting at feasts
or living in the abundance of great wealth.

And why is that?

Verily, monks, evilly minded
he gloats on beasts of the forest being slaughtered,
being brought to the slaughter;
and because of that
he goes not about on an elephant
nor on horseback
nor in a chariot
nor carriage
nor feasts at feasts
nor lives in the abundance of great wealth.

▪

But what shall be said
of him who gloats evilly on human beings being slaughtered,
being brought to the slaughter?

Verily, monks,
it shall be to his harm and hurt for many a day;
for, on the breaking up of the body after death,
he shall arise in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.'

[1] This and the following suttas are omitted in Nyāṇatiloka's translation.

[2] Hatthi-yāyī. Comy. hatthinā yānī. The higher estate is in each case presumably that of an after-life.

[3] Bhogabkogī

[4] For this set see M. i, 342; A. ii, 207; J. v, 270; below, § 57.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 19

Paṭhama Maraṇa-Sati Suttaṃ

Mindfulness of Death (a)[1]

---

[217]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One was staying in the Brick Hall at Nadika,[2]
he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Lord,'they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, mindfulness of death,
when made become,
made [218] to increase,
is very fruitful,
great in weal,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as consummation.[3]

Monks, make mindfulness of death become more!'

§

And when he had spoken thus, a monk said to him:

'I, lord, make mindfulness of death become.'

'How so, monk?'

'Herein, lord, such is my thought:

"Were I day and night
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

thus, lord, I make mindfulness of death become.'

▪

And another said:

'I too, lord, make mindfulness become.'

'How so, monk?'

'Herein, lord, such is my thought:

"Were I day-long
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

thus, lord, I make mindfulness of death become.'

▪

And another said:

'I too, lord, make mindfulness become.'

'How so, monk?'

'Such is my thought:

"Were I for just so long as I eat an alms-meal
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

thus, lord, I make mindfulness of death become.'

▪

And another said:

'I too, lord, make mindfulness become.'

'How so, monk?'

'Such is my thought:

"Were I as I munch and swallow four or five morsels
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

thus, lord, I make mindfulness of death become.'

▪

And another said:

'I too, lord, make mindfulness become.'

'How so, monk?'

'Such is my thought:

"Were I as I munch and swallow only one morsel
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

thus, lord, I make mindfulness of death become.'

▪

And another said:

'I too, lord, make mindfulness become.'

'How so, monk?'

'Such is my thought:

"Were I for just so long as I breathe in and out or breathe out and in,
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

thus, lord, I make mindfulness of death become.'

§

And when he had thus spoken, the Exalted One said to the monks:

Monks, the monk who makes mindfulness of death become thus:

"Were I day and night
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me"

▪

or he who thinks thus:

"Were I day-long
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me"

or he who thinks thus:

▪

"Were I for just so long as I eat an alms-meal
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word, much would be done by me" -

▪

or he who thinks thus:

"Were I as I munch and swallow four or five morsels
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

those monks are said live indolently; slackly they make mindfulness of death become
for the destruction of the cankers.

▪

[219] But the monk who makes mindfulness of death become thus:

"Were I as I munch and swallow only one morsel
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word, much would be done by me" -

▪

and he who thinks thus:

"Were I for just so long as I breathe in and out or breathe out and in,
to abide mindful of the Exalted One's word,
much would be done by me" -

those monks are said to live earnestly; keenly they make mindfulness of death become
for the destruction of the cankers.

Wherefore, monks, train yourselves thus:

We will live earnestly;[4] keenly will we make mindfulness of death become
for the destruction of the cankers.

Train yourselves thus, monks.'

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 316.

[2] So our text, S.e. and Comy.; see K.S. ii, 51 for variants; Watters' Chwang, ii, 86, 'Nataka' on the Ganges between Vesālī and Patna; possibly, therefore, the name is connected with nadī.

[3] Pariyosānā.

[4] Cf. the dying instruction: 'Earnestly achieve.' See above, p. 92.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
II: Sārāṇīya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter II: Be Considerate

Sutta 20

Dutiya Maraṇa-Sati Suttaṃ

Mindfulness of Death (b)[1]

---

[219]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One was staying in the Brick Hall at Nadika, he addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

'Lord,'they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, mindfulness of death,
when made become,
made to increase,
is very fruitful,
great in weal,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as consummation.

§

How so, monks is mindfulness of death,
when made become,
made to increase,
very fruitful,
great in weal,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as consummation?

-○-

Consider the monk who,
when day declines and night sets in,
reflects thus:

"The chances of death for me are many.

Snake,
scorpion,
or centipede may bite me
and bring death and hinder[2] me;
I may stumble and fall,
the food I have eaten may make me ill,
bile may convulse me,
phlegm choke me,
cutting winds within rack me
and bring death and hinder me."[3]

-○-

Monks, let that monk reflect thus:

"Have I given up every evil and wicked thing which,
were I to die to-night,
would hinder me?"

-○-

Monks, if, on reflection,
he know that he has not,
let an urge in great measure be made by that monk,
an effort,
an endeavour,
an exertion,
a struggle,
let him get mindfulness
and self-possession.

-○-

Monks, just as were his cloth and hair on fire
he would make an urge in great measure,
an effort,
an endeavour,
an [220] exertion,
a struggle,
would get mindfulness and self-possession,
to put out the fire thereof;
even so let an urge in great measure be made by him,
an effort,
an endeavour,
an exertion,
a struggle,
let him get mindfulness and self-possession,
to give up every evil and wicked thing.

-○-

But if, monks, on reflection
he knows there is no evil or wickedness
that has not been given up by him,
which, were he to die that night,

would hinder him,
let him live with zest and delight,
training himself day and night
in the ways of right.

▪

Again, monks, consider the monk who, when night is spent
and day breaks,
reflects thus:

"The chances of death for me are many.

Snake,
scorpion,
or centipede may bite me
and bring death and hinder me;
I may stumble and fall,
the food I have eaten may make me ill,
bile may convulse me,
phlegm choke me,
cutting winds within rack me
and bring death and hinder me."

-○-

Monks, let that monk reflect thus:

"Have I given up every evil and wicked thing which,
were I to die to-day,
would hinder me?"

-○-

Monks, if, on reflection,
he know that he has not,

let an urge in great measure be made by that monk,
an effort,
an endeavour,
an exertion,
a struggle,
let him get mindfulness
and self-possession.

-○-

Monks, just as were his cloth and hair on fire
he would make an urge in great measure,
an effort,
an endeavour,
an exertion,
a struggle,
would get mindfulness and self-possession,
to put out the fire thereof;
even so let an urge in great measure be made by him,
an effort,
an endeavour,
an exertion,
a struggle,
let him get mindfulness and self-possession,
to give up every evil and wicked thing.

-○-

But if, monks, on reflection
he knows there is no evil or wickedness
that has not been given up by him,
which, were he to die that day,
would hinder him,
let him live with zest and delight,
training himself day and night
in the ways of right.

"Monks, mindfulness of death,
when made become,
mad to increase,
is very fruitful,
great in weal,
merging in the deathless,
having the deathless as consummation.

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 320.

[2] Comy. death is a hindrance to life, to a recluse's duties, to the ordinary man working for heaven or to one on the Way.

[3] Cf. above V, § 77.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 21

Sāmagāmaka Suttaṃ

At Sāmagāmaka[1]

---

[220]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One once dwelt among the Sakkas at Sāmagāma[2] near the lotus-pond.

Now, when the night was far spent,
a deva of exceeding loveliness,
lighting up the whole lotus-pond,
approached him,
saluted
and stood at one side.|| ||

Thus standing,
the deva said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, these three things lead to a monk's failure.

What three?

Delight[3] in worldly activity,[4]
delight in talk,
delight in sleep.

Lord, these three things lead to the falling away of a monk.'

Thus spoke that deva
and the Master approved.

Then thought the deva:

'The Master is one in thought with me,'
and, saluting the Exalted One,
keeping him on his right,
vanished thence.

§

And when that night was over,
the Exalted One addressed [221] the monks
and told them:

When the night was far spent, monks,
a deva of exceeding loveliness,
lighting up the whole lotus-pond,
approached,
saluted
and stood at one side.

Thus standing,
the deva said:

'Lord, these three things lead to a monk's failure.

What three?

Delight in worldly activity,
delight in talk,
delight in sleep.

Lord, these three things lead
to the falling away of a monk.'

Thus spoke that deva
and I approved.

Then thought the deva:

'The Master is one in thought with me,'
and, saluting,
keeping me on his right,
vanished thence.

Monks, it is to the discredit of each one of you, it is to the loss of each one of you,[5] that even devas know the things that lead to your failing in righteousness.

Monks, other three things that lead to failure
I will also teach you;
listen,
pay heed
and I will speak."

'Yes, lord,' rejoined those monks;
and the Exalted One said:

"And what, monks, are the three?

Delight in company,
evil speaking
and friendship with bad men.

Verily, monks, these are the three things that lead to failure.

Monks, all those who
in the long road of the past
have failed in righteousness,
have failed in righteousness
just because of these six things;
all those who in the long road of the future
shall fail in righteousness, shall do so because of these six things;
yea, monks, all who now fail in righteousness, fail therein just because of these six things.'

---

[1] In the Uddāna: Sāmako. S.e. Samako.

[2] Sāmagāmake. Comy. Sāmakānaṃ ussannattā evaṃ laddha-nāme gāmake; the name recurs at M. ii, 243 as Sāmagāma; MA. (Aluvihāra ed., p. 829) merely repeats our comment.

[3] Cf. above VI, § 14; It. 71; below, §§ 31 and 69

[4] Kamma.

[5] S.e. reads tesaṃ vo dulladdhā

Of Related Interest:

See AN 6.22 for what was probably the conclusion of this sutta.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 22

Aparihānīya-Dhamma Suttaṃ

The Unfailing

---

[221]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, six are these things that fail not
I will teach you;
listen,
pay heed and I will speak.

And what, monks, are these six?

Delighting not in worldly activity,[1]
in talk,

in sleep,
in company;
fair speech
and friendship with good men.

Verily, monks, these are the six things that fail not.

■

Monks, all those who
in the long road of the past
have failed not in righteousness,
have failed not in righteousness
just because of these six things;
all those who in the long road of the future
shall fail not in righteousness,
shall fail not in righteousness,
just because of these six things;
yea, monks, all who now fail not in righteousness, fail not in righteousness
just because of these six things.'

---

[1] Kamma.

Of Related Interest:

See AN 6.21 for what was probably the beginning of this sutta.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

Sutta 23

Bhaya Sutta

Fear[1]

---

[221]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, "fear" is a name for sense-desires;
"pain" is a name for sense-desires;
"disease" is a name for sense-desires;
"blain" is a name for sense-desires;
"bondage" is a name for sense-desires;
"bog" is a name for sense-desires.

§

[222]And wherefore, monks, is fear a name for sense-desires?

Monks, impassioned by sensuous passions,
bound by passionate desire,
neither in this world
is one free from fear,
nor in the next world
is one free from fear.

Therefore "fear" is a name for sense-desires.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is "pain," a name for sense-desires?

Monks, impassioned by sensuous passions,
bound by passionate desire,
neither in this world
is one free from pain,
nor in the next world
is one free from pain.

Therefore "pain" is a name for sense-desires.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is "disease" a name for sense-desires?

Monks, impassioned by sensuous passions,
bound by passionate desire,
neither in this world
is one free from disease,

nor in the next world
is one free from disease.

Therefore "disease" is a name for sense-desires.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is "blain" a name for sense-desires?

Monks, impassioned by sensuous passions,
bound by passionate desire,
neither in this world
is one free from blain,
nor in the next world
is one free from blain.

Therefore "blain" is a name for sense-desires.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is "bondage" a name for sense-desires?

Monks, impassioned by sensuous passions,
bound by passionate desire,
neither in this world
is one free from bondage,
nor in the next world
is one free from bondage.

Therefore "bondage" is a name for sense-desires.

▪

And wherefore, monks, is "bog" a name for sense-desires?

Monks, impassioned by sensuous passions,
bound by passionate desire,
neither in this world

is one free from bog,
nor in the next world
is one free from bog.

Therefore "bog" is a name for sense-desires.

Fear,[2] pain, disease, blain, bondage, bog are, names
For sense-desires to which the worldlings cling.
They who see fear in grasping[3] - source of birth
And death - grasp not and, ending both, are freed;
Won is the peace, blissful in perfect cool[4]
They dwell here now, all fear and hate long gone,
All ill surpassed.'

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 289 for eight; also Sn. 51; SnA. 100.

[2] For the first two lines of the text cf. A. iv, 290; for the second pāda of the second line see J.P.T.S., 1909, 342; the last four lines (text) recur at M. iii, 187; A. i, 142; with the last pāda cf. It. 4.

[3] Upādāne. Comy. the fourfold - i.e., kāma, diṭṭhi, sīlabbata, attavāda.

[4] Abhinibbutā.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 24

Himavanta Suttaṃ

Himalaya

---

[222]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, with six things endowed,
a monk may cleave the mountain-king, Himalaya,
but who shall say it of rude ignorance?

What six?

Herein,[1] monks, a monk is skilled in the attainment of concentration,
skilled in maintaining concentration,
skilled in emerging from concentration, skilled in the weal[2] of concentration,

skilled in the range of concentration, skilled in the resolve for concentration.

Verily, monks, with these six things endowed,
a monk pay cleave the mountain-king Himalaya,
but who shall say it of rude[3] ignorance?'

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 34; S. iii, 263 ff.

[2] Kallita-.

[3] Chava. Comy. lāmika.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 25

Anussati-ṭ-Ṭhāna Suttaṃ

Ever Minding

---

[223]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these six states of ever minding.[1]

What six?

Herein, monks, the Ariyan disciple ever minds the Tathāgata:

"He is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
perfected in knowledge and way of life,

one well-gone,
a knower of the worlds,
none higher,
a tamer of tamable men,
a teacher,
the awake among devas and men,
the Exalted One!"

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds the Tathāgata, his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures.

Verily, monks, by making this thought their object,[2]
some men thereby are purged.[3]

■

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds Dhamma:

"Well declared by the Exalted One is Dhamma,
a view for this life,
nor for this only,
bidding come and see,
a guide,
to be known by the wise
each for himself."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds the Dhamma,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,

nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures.

Verily, monks, by making this thought their object,
some men thereby are purged.

▪

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds the Order:

"The Exalted One's Order of disciples
has rightly stepped the way,
has straightly stepped the way,
has fitly stepped the way,
has wholly stepped the way,
that is:
the four pairs among men,
the eight persons among mankind;
and this Order of disciples of the Exalted One
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds the Order,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,

moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures.

Verily, monks, by making this thought their object,
some men thereby are purged.

▪

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds the virtues in himself:

"They are unbroken,
without a flaw,
spotless,
without blemish;
they bring freedom
and are praised by wise men;
they are incorruptible
and lead to concentration."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds virtues in himself,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures.

Verily, monks, by making this thought their object,
some men thereby are purged.

▪

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds liberality in himself:

"It is indeed a gain for me,
indeed I have greatly gained,
I who among folk, overwhelmed by the taint of stinginess,
live the home-life heart-free of the stingy taint,
giving freely,
open-hand¢d,
loving bounty,
within reach of all,
finding joy in alms-distribution."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds virtues in himself,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures.

Verily, monks, by making this thought their object,
some men thereby are purged.

▪

Or the Ariyan disciple ever minds the devas:

"There are the Four Royal devas,
there are the devas of the Thirty,
the Yama devas,
the Tusita devas,
the devas who delight in creating,
the devas who have power over others' creations,
the Brahma-world devas,

and there are the devas beyond that;
because their faith was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such faith;
because their virtue was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such virtue;
because their learning was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such learning;
because their liberality was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such liberality;
because their wisdom was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such wisdom.'

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds
faith,
virtue,
learning,
liberality
and wisdom,
both in himself
and in those devas
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures.

Verily, monks, by making this thought their object,
some men thereby are purged.

■

Monks, these are the six states of ever minding.'

---

[1] Cf. above VI, §§ 9 and 10; the text is mostly in full; Vism. 226.

[2] Ārammaṇaṃ karitvā. Comy. idaṃ Buddh'ānussati-kamma-ṭ-ṭhānaṃ.

[3] Comy. they attain Nibbāna.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 26

Mahā Kaccāna Suttaṃ

Kaccāna[1]

---

[224]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Mahā Kaccāna was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

There the venerable Mahā Kaccāna addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks, reverend sirs!.'

'Reverend sir!' they rejoined;
and the venerable one said:

'It[2] is wonderful, reverend sirs;
it is amazing
how the escape from the noose[3]
was conceived by that Exalted One,
knower,
seer,
arahant,
fully awake -
to purge man,
overcome grief and woe,

clear away pain and distress,
win truth,[4]
realize Nibbāna -
I mean the six states of ever minding.

What six?

Consider, reverend sirs, the Ariyan disciple who is ever minding the Tathāgata:

'He is the Exalted One,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
perfected in knowledge and way of life,
one well-gone,
a knower of the worlds,
none higher,
a tamer of tamable men,
a teacher,
the awake among devas and men,
the Exalted One!'

When he so minds him,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures;
and, sirs, that Ariyan disciple
lives at all times
with heart spacious,
large,

lofty,
boundless,
free of hatred and ill-will.

Verily, reverend sirs,
by making this thought their object,
some men thereby become pure in nature.

▪

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds Dhamma:

"Well declared by the Exalted One is Dhamma,
a view for this life,
nor for this only,
bidding come and see,
a guide,
to be known by the wise
each for himself."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds the Dhamma,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures;
and, sirs, that Ariyan disciple
lives at all times
with heart spacious,
large,
lofty,

boundless,
free of hatred and ill-will.

Verily, reverend sirs,
by making this thought their object,
some men thereby become pure in nature.

▪

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds the Order:

"The Exalted One's Order of disciples
has rightly stepped the way,
has straightly stepped the way,
has fitly stepped the way,
has wholly stepped the way,
that is:
the four pairs among men,
the eight persons among mankind;
and this Order of disciples of the Exalted One
is worthy of offerings,
worthy of gifts,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds the Order,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures;

and, sirs, that Ariyan disciple
lives at all times
with heart spacious,
large,
lofty,
boundless,
free of hatred and ill-will.

Verily, reverend sirs,
by making this thought their object,
some men thereby become pure in nature.

▪

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds the virtues in himself:

"They are unbroken,
without a flaw,
spotless,
without blemish;
they bring freedom
and are praised by wise men;
they are incorruptible
and lead to concentration."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds virtues in himself,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures;
and, sirs, that Ariyan disciple

lives at all times
with heart spacious,
large,
lofty,
boundless,
free of hatred and ill-will.

Verily, reverend sirs,
by making this thought their object,
some men thereby become pure in nature.

▪

Again, the Ariyan disciple ever minds liberality in himself:

"It is indeed a gain for me,
indeed I have greatly gained,
I who among folk, overwhelmed by the taint of stinginess,
live the home-life heart-free of the stingy taint,
giving freely,
open-hand¢d,
loving bounty,
within reach of all,
finding joy in alms-distribution."

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds virtues in himself,
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures;
and, sirs, that Ariyan disciple

lives at all times
with heart spacious,
large,
lofty,
boundless,
free of hatred and ill-will.

Verily, reverend sirs,
by making this thought their object,
some men thereby become pure in nature.

▪

Or the Ariyan disciple ever minds the devas:

"There are the Four Royal devas,
there are the devas of the Thirty,
the Yama devas,
the Tusita devas,
the devas who delight in creating,
the devas who have power over others' creations,
the Brahma-world devas,
and there are the devas beyond that;
because their faith was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such faith;
because their virtue was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such virtue;
because their learning was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such learning;
because their liberality was such,
those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such liberality;
because their wisdom was such,

those devas fared hence and arose there,
I also have such wisdom.'

Monks, what time the Ariyan disciple minds
faith,
virtue,
learning,
liberality
and wisdom,
both in himself
and in those devas
his heart is not lust-obsessed,
nor hate-obsessed,
nor obsessed by infatuation;
upright in heart is he at that time,
moved,
freed,
raised from greed;
and this greed, monks,
is a name for the fivefold sensuous pleasures;
and, sirs, that Ariyan disciple
lives at all times
with heart spacious,
large,
lofty,
boundless,
free of hatred and ill-will.

Verily, reverend sirs,
by making this thought their object,
some men thereby become pure in nature.

▪

It is wonderful, reverend sirs;
it is amazing

how the escape from the noose
was conceived by that Exalted One,
knower,
seer,
arahant,
fully awake -
to purge man,
overcome grief and woe,
clear away pain and distress,
win truth,
realize Nibbāna -
I mean the six states of ever minding.

---

[1] See above VI, § 17.

[2] This is a stock para.; see A. iv, 426, where Ānanda uses it. Our Comy. is much the same as on A. iv.

[3] Sambādha.

[4] Ñāya.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 27

Paṭhama Samaya Suttaṃ

The Times (a)

---

[224]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

Now a certain monk visited the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side;
and so seated,
he said to the Exalted [225] One:

'Lord, how often should one go and see a monk who is a student of mind?'[1]

'Monk, these six times
one should go and see a monk who is a student of the mind.

What six?

Herein, monk, when a monk is obsessed in heart by passionate lust, overwhelmed by passionate lust
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,

from the surge of passionate lust;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

"Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by passionate lust,
overwhelmed thereby,
nor know I any refuge from the surge thereof.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this lusting."

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that lust.

This, monk, is the first time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by ill-will[2]
overwhelmed by ill-will
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of ill-will;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

"Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by ill-will,
overwhelmed by ill-will,
nor know I any refuge from the surge of ill-will.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma

to rid me of this ill-will."

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that ill-will.

This, monk, is the second time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by sloth and torpor
overwhelmed by sloth and torpor
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of sloth and torpor;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

"Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by sloth and torpor,
overwhelmed by sloth and torpor,
nor know I any refuge from the surge of sloth and torpor.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this sloth and torpor."

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that sloth and torpor.

This, monk, is the third time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by flurry and worry
overwhelmed by flurry and worry
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of flurry and worry;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

"Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by flurry and worry,
overwhelmed by flurry and worry,
nor know I any refuge from the surge of flurry and worry.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this flurry and worry."

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that flurry and worry.

This, monk, is the fourth time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by or by doubt,
overwhelmed by doubt
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of doubt;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

"Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by doubt,
overwhelmed by doubt,

nor know I any refuge from the surge of doubt.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this doubt."

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that doubt.

This, monk, is the fifth time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Moreover, monk, when from some image,[3]
as he concentrates thereon,
there comes not to him at intervals
canker-destruction,
nor knows he that image
nor realizes it;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind, and say:

"Good sir, from this image,
as I concentrate thereon,
there comes not to me at intervals
canker-destruction,
nor know I that image
nor realize it.

Well were it for me, if the venerable [226] one would teach me Dhamma
to the end that I may destroy the cankers."

Then the monk will teach him Dhanāna to destroy the cankers.

This, monk, is the sixth time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.'

---

[1] Mano-bhāvanīya, Comy. ettha manaṃ vaḍḍheti. K.S. iii, 1 and v, 320; 'worshipful'; F. Dial, ii, 304: 'of great intellect.'Cf. Gotama the Man, p. 153; Sakya, p. 245; Manual, p. 223.

[2] Comy. explains Dhamma in the first five as (1) asubha-kammaṭṭhāna; (2) metta-;i (3) thīna-middha-vinodana- or aloka-saññā or viriyārambha-vatthu; (4) samatha-kammaiṭṭhāna; (5) tiṇṇaṃ ratanānaṃ guṇakathaṃ kathento.

[3] Nimitta, mental reflex.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 28

Dutiya Samaya Suttaṃ

The Times (b)

---

[226]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when many elders dwelt at the Deer Park in Isipatana, near Benares, there arose by chance this talk among them, as they sat assembled in the round hall,[1]
after breakfast,
on their return from alms-collecting:

'What's the proper time, reverend sirs,
to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind?'

▪

Now having stated this,
a certain monk said to the elders:

'When, reverend sirs, a monk,
a student of mind,
has returned from alms-collecting,
breakfasted,
washed his feet,

seated himself,
crossed his legs,
straightened his body
and made mindfulness stand up,
as it were,
before him;
then is the time to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind.'

▪

And after he had thus spoken, another said:

'Nay, reverend sirs,
that is not the time to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind;
for when he has returned from alms-collecting,
breakfasted,
washed his feet,
seated himself,
crossed his legs,
straightened his body
and made mindfulness stand up,
as it were,
before him;
he is languid from his walk
and is not then completely at ease;
or he is languid after his meal
and is not then completely at ease.

Wherefore that is not the time,
to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind.

But when, sirs, in the evening
he has risen from seclusion

and is seated in the shade of his lodging,
cross-legged,
with body erect,
with mindfulness set before him;
then is the time to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind.'

▪

Then said another:

'Nay, verily, reverend sirs,
that is not the time to go and see a monk who is a student of mind; for when, reverend sirs, in the evening
he has risen from seclusion
and is seated in the shade of his lodging,
cross-legged,
with body erect,
with mindfulness set before him
whatsoever concentration-image he has by day concentrated on,
just that will then beset him.

Wherefore that is not the time
to go and see that monk.

But when, sirs, night recedes
and day dawns
and he is seated cross-legged
with body erect
with mindfulness set before him;
then is the time to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind.'

▪

But another monk said:

'Indeed, neither is that the time
to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind;
for when night recedes
and day dawns
and he is seated cross-legged
with body erect [227] with mindfulness set before him,
then is his body endued with strength[2]
and he finds comfort in pondering on the teaching of the Buddhas.

Wherefore that is not the time
to go and see a monk
who is a student of mind.'

§

And when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Mahā Kaccāna said this to the elders:

'From the mouth of the Exalted One, reverend sirs,
have I heard this;
from his own mouth have I received this:

"There are these six times for a monk to go and see a monk who is a student of mind.

What six?

Herein, monk, when a monk is obsessed in heart by passionate lust, overwhelmed by passionate lust

and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of passionate lust;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

'Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by passionate lust,
overwhelmed thereby,
nor know I any refuge from the surge thereof.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this lusting.'

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that lust.

This, monk, is the first time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by ill-will
overwhelmed by ill-will
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of ill-will;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

'Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by ill-will,
overwhelmed by ill-will,
nor know I any refuge from the surge of ill-will.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this ill-will.'

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that ill-will.

This, monk, is the second time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by sloth and torpor
overwhelmed by sloth and torpor
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of sloth and torpor;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

'Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by sloth and torpor,
overwhelmed by sloth and torpor,
nor know I any refuge from the surge of sloth and torpor.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this sloth and torpor.'

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that sloth and torpor.

This, monk, is the third time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by flurry and worry
overwhelmed by flurry and worry
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of flurry and worry;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

'Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by flurry and worry,
overwhelmed by flurry and worry,
nor know I any refuge from the surge of flurry and worry.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this flurry and worry.'

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that flurry and worry.

This, monk, is the fourth time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Again, when in heart he is obsessed by or by doubt,
overwhelmed by doubt
and knows no refuge,
as there really is,
from the surge of doubt;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind,
and say this to him:

'Good sir, I am indeed obsessed in heart by doubt,
overwhelmed by doubt,
nor know I any refuge from the surge of doubt.

Well were it for me,
if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to rid me of this doubt.'

Then the monk will teach him Dhamma
to rid him of that doubt.

This, monk, is the fifth time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind.

▪

Moreover, monk, when from some image,
as he concentrates thereon,
there comes not to him at intervals
canker-destruction,
nor knows he that image
nor realizes it;
then let him visit a monk,
who has made a study of mind, and say:

'Good sir, from this image,
as I concentrate thereon,
there comes not to me at intervals
canker-destruction,
nor know I that image
nor realize it.

Well were it for me, if the venerable one would teach me Dhamma
to the end that I may destroy the cankers.'

Then the monk will teach him Dhanāna to destroy the cankers.

This, monk, is the sixth time
to go and see a monk
who has made a study of mind."

From the mouth of the Exalted One
have I heard this;
from his very mouth have I received this.'

---

[1] Maṇḍala-māḷe. Comy. bhojana-sālāya.

[2] Oja-ṭṭhāyi Comy. ojāya ṭhtto, patiṭṭhito.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 29

Udāyi Suttaṃ

Udāyin[1]

---

[227]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

And the Exalted One addressed the venerable Udāyin,
saying:

'How many states are there, Udāyin,
of ever minding?

Now when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Udāyin was silent.

▪

And a second time
the Exalted One addressed the venerable Udāyin,
saying:

'How many states are there, Udāyin,
of ever minding?

And a second time,
the venerable Udāyin was silent.

▪

And a third time
the Exalted One addressed the venerable Udāyin,
saying:

'How many states are there, Udāyin,
of ever minding?

And a third time,
the venerable Udāyin was silent.

▪

Then said the venerable Ānanda
to the venerable Udāyin:

'Udāyin, reverend sir,
the Master addresses you.'

'I am listening to the Exalted One, Ānanda, reverend sir!

▪

Lord, a monk remembers[2] many previous existences,
that is to say:
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,

a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each,
such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
that faring on thence
I arose there,
when such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
faring on thence
I arose here;
thus I would call to mind
each detail and circumstance
of my many previous dwellings" -

This, lord, is a state of ever minding.'[2]

■

Then said the Exalted One:

'I knew, Ānanda,
this foolish fellow, Udāyin,
did not live intent on higher thought.[3]ed1

§

How many states of ever minding are there, Ānanda?'

'Lord, there are five states.

What five?

Herein, lord, a monk, aloof from sensuous appetites,
aloof from evil ideas,
enters and abides in the first musing,
wherein applied and sustained thought works,
which is born of solitude
and is full of joy and ease.

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to dwelling at ease here now.

▪

Suppressing applied and sustained thought,
he enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of joy and ease,
free from applied and sustained thought,
and there the mind becomes calm and one-pointed.

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to dwelling at ease here now.

▪

Free from the zest for joy,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the [228] third musing[4],
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease'.

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to dwelling at ease here now.

▪

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to dwelling at ease here now.

▪

Again, lord, he concentrates on the thought of light,[5] fixes his mind on the thought of day - as by day,
so by night;
as by night,
so by day -
thus with mind neither hampered nor hindered, he makes his thought become radiant.[6]

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,

thus made to increase,
leads to the gain of knowledge and insight.[ed2]

▪

Again, lord, he considers this body,[ed3] upwards from the soles of his feet, downwards from the hair of his head,
as skin-bound,
as full of diverse impurities:

There is in this body
the hair of the head,
the hair of the body,
nails,
teeth,
skin,
flesh,
sinews,
bones,
marrow,
kidneys,
heart,
liver,
pleura,
spleen,
lungs,
intestines,
mesentery,
belly,
dung,
bile,
phlegm,
pus,
blood,
sweat,

fat,
tears,
lymph,
spittle,
snot,
synovia,
urine.[7]

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to the riddance of passionate lust.

▪

Again, lord, suppose he see a body[ed4]
cast away in a cemetery,
one day dead,
two days dead
or three days dead,
bloated,
blue-black,
a mass of pus;[8]
he compares his own body thus:

This body too is subject thus;
thus it will come to be;
this is not passed.[9]

-○-

Or suppose he see such a body being eaten by crows,[10] ravens,
vultures,
dogs,

jackals,
vermin;
he compares [229] his own body thus

This body too is subject thus;
thus it will come to be;
this is not passed.

-○-

So too, a body
that is a chain of bones, with flesh and blood,
sinew-bound;
he compares his own body thus:

This body too is subject thus;
thus it will come to be;
this is not passed.

-○-

So too, a body
that is but blood-bespattered,
sinew-bound;
he compares his own body thus:

This body too is subject thus;
thus it will come to be;
this is not passed.

-○-

So too, a body
that is without flesh or blood,
sinew-bound;
he compares his own body thus:

This body too is subject thus;
thus it will come to be;
this is not passed.

-○-

So too, a body
that is but bones
scattered here and there:
here a hand-bone,[11]
there a foot-bone,
there a leg-bone,
here a thigh-bone,
here a hip-bone,
there a back-bone,
here a skull;
he compares his own body thus:

This body too is subject thus;
thus it will come to be;
this is not passed.

-○-

Should he see a body,
cast away in a cemetery,
the bones of which
are white as a sea-shell,
a heap of bones,
a rotting,
powdering mass,
years old;
he compares his own body thus:

This body too is subject thus;
thus it will come to be;

this is not passed.

-○-

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to the rooting out of the conceit "I am."

▪

Then, lord,
by putting away ease
and by putting away ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill.

This state of ever minding, lord,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to the complete penetration of the countless elements.[12]

Lord, there are these five states of ever minding.'

▪

'Well done,
well done, Ānanda;
and hold, too,
this sixth to be a state of ever minding:

Herein, Ānanda,
a monk goes out mindful,
comes in mindful,
stands mindful,
sits mindful,
lies down mindful
and is mindful in performing action.[13]

This state of ever minding, Ānanda,
thus made become,
thus made to increase,
leads to mindfulness and self-possession.'

---

[1] Comy. Lāḷ'Udāyin foolish Udāyin; see Vin. i, 115; Dial. iii, 109.

[2] Anussarati and anussati, both from √smṛ.

[3] Adhicitta. Comy. samādhi-vipassanā-citta.

[4] The fourth is not included, being beyond 'sukha.'

[5] D. iii, 223; A. ii, 45; iv, 86; S. v, 279.

[6] Comy. Dibba-cakkhu-ñāṇ'atthāya sah'obhāsakaṃ cittaṃ brūheti, vaḍḍheti.

[7] This list recurs at D. ii, 293; M. i, 57; A. v, 109; S. v. 278 (trsl. gives thirty-two parts in error, though at Kh. 2 there are thirty-two); see Vism. 285-303, to which our Comy. refers.

[8] M. and D. loc. cit.; M. iii, 91. Comy. observes: swollen like a goatskin blown up; puffy, loathsome in repulsiveness; mottled, purplish; red where the flesh runs, white where the pus collects, but mostly blue (as if clad in blue robes!); and pus trickles from the broken places and from the nine orifices.

[9] With Comy., S.e. and other passages reading etaṃ.

[10] Comy. perched on the belly, tearing at the belly-flesh, the cheeks, the eyes.

[11] Comy. the bones of the hand consist of sixty-four pieces.

[12] Dhātu.

[13] Kammaṃ adhiṭṭhāti S.e. so, but v.l. caṃkammaṃ which is probably correct; cf. S. ii, 282; UdA. 231; Nidd. i, 26.

[ed1] The Pali puts in quotes the Buddha's thought "This foolish Udayi does not live intent on higher thought." The Buddha is not making a claim to have known, he is making a statement about what he knew.

[ed2] Ñāṇa-dassana. The 'knowing and seeing' of the Streamwinner.

[ed3] Cf. DN 22 §5 and similar passage in MN 10.

[ed4] Cf. DN 22 §7 and similar passage in MN 10.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
III: Anuttariya-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter III: Above All

Sutta 30

Anuttariya Suttaṃ

Above All

---

[229]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these six are above all.[1]

What six?

The sight above all;
the sound above all;
the gain above all;
the training above all;
the service above all;
the ever minding above all.

§

And what, monks, is the sight above all?

Herein, monks, some go to see the treasures:[2]
the elephant,
the horse,
the gem;
to see divers things;
to see some recluse [230] or godly man,
wrong in view,
treading the wrong path.

And is that the sight, monks?

I say it is not;
it is indeed a mean sight,
common,
vulgar,
un-Ariyan,
not wall-found,
leading not to world-weariness,
dispassion,
ending,
calm,
knowledge,
awakening,
Nibbāna.[3]

But some,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust,[4]

go to see the Tathāgata or the Tathāgata's disciple.

That, monks, is the sight above all sights
for purging man,
overcoming grief and woe,
clearing away ill and pain,
winning truth,
and realizing Nibbāna;
I mean,
going to see the Tathāgata
or his disciple,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust.

This, monks, is called the sight above all.

Herein is the sight above all.

▪

And what, monks, is the sound above all?

Herein, monks,
some go to hear the sound of the drum,
the lute,
the sound of song;
to hear divers things;
to hear the Dhamma of some recluse or godly man,
wrong in view,
treading the wrong path.

And is that the sound, monks?

No, I say it is not;
it is indeed a mean sound,

common,
vulgar,
un-Ariyan,
not wall-found,
leading not to world-weariness,
dispassion,
ending,
calm,
knowledge,
awakening,
Nibbāna.

But some,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust,
go to hear the Tathāgata's Dhamma
or his disciple's.

That, monks, is the sound above all sounds
for purging man,
overcoming grief and woe,
clearing away ill and pain,
winning truth,
and realizing Nibbāna;
I mean,
going to hear the Tathāgata's Dhamma
or his disciple's,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust.

This, monks, is called the sound above all.

Herein is the sight and sound above all.

▪

And what, monks, is the gain above all?

Herein, monks,
some gain the gain of a son
or a wife
or wealth;
gain divers things;
gain faith in some recluse or godly man,
wrong in view,
treading the wrong path.

And is that the gain, monks?

No, I say it is not;
it is indeed a mean gain,
common,
vulgar,
un-Ariyan,
not wall-found,
leading not to world-weariness,
dispassion,
ending,
calm,
knowledge,
awakening,
Nibbāna.

But some,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust,
gain faith in the Tathāgata
or his disciple.

That, monks, is the gain above all gains
for purging man,

overcoming grief and woe,
clearing away ill and pain,
winning truth,
and realizing Nibbāna;
I mean,
gaining faith in the Tathāgata
or his disciple,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust.

This, monks, is called the gain above all.

Herein is the sight, sound and gain above all.

▪

[231] And what, monks, is the training above ail?

Herein, monks,
some train in elephant-lore,
in horsemanship,
in the use of the chariot,
the bow,
the sword;[5]
train in divers ways;
train after the way of some recluse or godly man,
wrong in view,
treading the wrong path.

And is that the training, monks?

No, I say it is not;
it is indeed a mean training,
common,
vulgar,
un-Ariyan,
not wall-found,

leading not to world-weariness,
dispassion,
ending,
calm,
knowledge,
awakening,
Nibbāna.

But some,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust,
train in the onward course
of virtue,
thought
and insight[6]
according to the Dhamma-discipline declared by the Tathāgata.

That, monks, is the training above all training
for purging man,
overcoming grief and woe,
clearing away ill and pain,
winning truth,
and realizing Nibbāna;
I mean,
training in the onward course
of virtue,
thought
and insight
according to the Dhamma-discipline declared by the Tathāgata, endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust.

This, monks, is called the training above all.

Herein is the sight, sound, gain and training above all.

▪

And what, monks, is the service above all?

Herein, monks, some serve a warrior,
a brahman,
a householder;
serve divers folk;
serve some recluse or godly man,
wrong in view,
treading the wrong path.

And is that the service, monks?

No, I say it is not;
it is indeed a mean service,
common,
vulgar,
un-Ariyan,
not wall-found,
leading not to world-weariness,
dispassion,
ending,
calm,
knowledge,
awakening,
Nibbāna.

But some,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust,
serve the Tathāgata
or his disciple.

That, monks, is the service above all services
for purging man,

overcoming grief and woe,
clearing away ill and pain,
winning truth,
and realizing Nibbāna;
I mean,
serving the Tathāgata
or his disciple,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust.

This, monks, is called the service above all.

Herein is the sight, sound, gain, training and service above all.

▪

And what, monks, is the ever minding above all?

Herein, monks,
some ever mind the gain of a son
or a wife
or wealth;
ever mind divers gains;
ever mind some recluse or godly man,
wrong in view,
treading the wrong path.

And is that the ever minding, monks?

No, I say it is not;
it is indeed a mean ever minding,
common,
vulgar,
un-Ariyan,
not well-found,
leading not to world-weariness,
dispassion,

ending,
calm,
knowledge,
awakening,
Nibbāna.

But some,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust,
ever mind the Tathāgata
or the Tathāgata's disciple.

That, monks, is the ever minding above all ever minding
for purging man,
over- [232] coming grief and woe,
clearing away ill and pain,
winning truth,
and realizing Nibbāna;
I mean, ever minding the Tathāgata
or his disciple,
endued with faith and piety,
sure in trust.

This, monks, is called the ever minding above all.

Verily, monks, these are the six above all.

They who have found the noblest sight, the sound
Above all sounds, the gain of gains; have found
Joy in the training, are on service set,
Who make the ever minding more-become:
They who have found, linked to right loneliness,
The deathless way to peace[7] - joyous in zeal, Restrained by virtue, wise, they verily Shall in due time know where all Ill doth end.'

[1] See above VI, § 8.

[2] Dial. ii, 204 ff.

[3] Clause borrowed from the First Utterance.

[4] Niviṭṭha-saddho, niviṭṭha-pemo (from √prī), ekantagato abhippasanno.

[5] Cf. Vin. ii, 10; Mil. 66.

[6] Adhisīla, adhicitta, adhipaññā.

[7] Viveka-paṭisaṅuttaṃ khemam amata-gāminaṃ; for the first compound see Thag. 589; [but?] the second half of the line recurs at M. i, 508 (see Tr.'s n. at 571); there the reading is -gāminaṃ, with our v.l. and S.e. Our Comy. is silent.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
IV: Devatā-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IV: The Devas

Sutta 31

Sekha Suttaṃ

In Training

---

[232]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these six things lead to failure for a monk in training.

What six?

Delight[1] in worldly activity,[2]
delight in talk,
delight in sleep,
delight in company,
delight in being unguarded as to the doors of the senses delight in immoderate in eating.

Monks, these are the six things that lead to failure for a monk in training.

§

Monks, these six things lead to not failing for a monk in training.

What six?

Non-delight in worldly activity,
non-delight in talk,
non-delight in sleep,
non-delight in company,
non-delight in being unguarded as to the doors of the senses non-delight in immoderate in eating.

Monks, these are the six things that lead to failure for a monk in training.

---

[1] Cf. above VI, § 22.

[2] Kamma.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
IV: Devatā-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IV: The Devas

Sutta 32

Paṭhama Aparihāna Suttaṃ

They Fail Not (a)

---

[232]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now, when night was far spent,
a deva of exceeding loveliness,
lighting up the whole of Jeta Grove,
approached the Exalted One,
saluted
and stood at one side.

Thus standing,
the deva said:

"Lord, these six things
lead not to a monk's failure.

What six?

Reverence for the Master,
reverence for Dhamma,
reverence for the Order,
reverence for the training,
reverence for earnestness reverence for good-will.[1]

[233] Verily, lord, these six things lead not to a monk's failure."

Thus spoke the deva and the Master approved;
and seeing this,
he saluted the Exalted One and passed out on the right.

§

And when the night was over,
the Exalted One addressed the monks:

"To me, monks, when night was far spent,
a deva of exceeding loveliness,
lighting up the whole of Jeta Grove,
approached,
saluted
and stood at one side.

Thus standing,
the deva said:

'Lord, these six things
lead not to a monk's failure.

What six?

Reverence for the Master,
reverence for Dhamma,
reverence for the Oder,
reverence for the training,
reverence for earnestness reverence for for good-will.

Verily, lord, these six things lead not to a monk's failure.'

Thus spoke the deva and I approved;
and seeing this,
he saluted
and passed out on the right."

Deep reverence for the Master, Dhamma, Order, Reverence for earnestness and for good-will:
Not thuswise fails a monk; he's nigh Nibbāna.'

---

[1] Above VI, § 21; below, § 79; A. iv, 28, [+ §§ 32, 33] where the gāthā is almost the same.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
IV: Devatā-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IV: The Devas

Sutta 33

Dutiya Aparihāna Suttaṃ

They Fail Not (b)

---

[233]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now, when night was far spent,
a deva of exceeding loveliness,
lighting up the whole of Jeta Grove,
approached the Exalted One,
saluted
and stood at one side.

Thus standing,
the deva said:

"Lord, these six things
lead not to a monk's failure.

What six?

Reverence for the Master,
reverence for Dhamma,
reverence for the Order,
reverence for the training,
reverence for modesty
reverence for fear of blame.

Verily, lord, these six things lead not to a monk's failure."

Thus spoke the deva and the Master approved;
and seeing this,
he saluted the Exalted One and passed out on the right.

§

And when the night was over,
the Exalted One addressed the monks:

"To me, monks, when night was far spent,
a deva of exceeding loveliness,
lighting up the whole of Jeta Grove,
approached,
saluted
and stood at one side.

Thus standing,
the deva said:

'Lord, these six things
lead not to a monk's failure.

What six?

Reverence for the Master,
reverence for Dhamma,
reverence for the Order,
reverence for the training,
reverence for modesty
reverence for fear of blame.

Verily, lord, these six things lead not to a monk's failure.'

Thus spoke the deva and I approved;
and seeing this,
he saluted
and passed out on the right."

Deep reverence for the Master, Dhamma, Order,
Reverence for modesty and fear of blame:
Not thuswise fails a monk; he's nigh Nibbāna.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
IV: Devatā-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IV: The Devas

Sutta 34

Moggallāna Suttaṃ

Mahā Moggallāna

---

[233]

Thus have I heard:

Once when the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park
this thought came to the venerable Mahā Moggallāna, gone apart for solitude:

'To how many devas is there this knowledge:

"We have Won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'[1]

▪

Now[2] at that time
a monk named Tissa had just died and was reborn in one of the Brahma worlds, and they knew him even there as Tissa the mighty, Tissa the powerful.

▪

Then the venerable Mahā Moggallāna — as a strong man might stretch out his bent arm, might bend his stretched arm — vanished from Jeta Grove and appeared in that Brahma-world.

▪

And deva Tissa saw the venerable one from afar,
coming along,
and on [234] seeing him said:

'Come, worthy[3] Moggallāna;
welcome, worthy Moggallāna!

'Tis long since you made this round,[4]
I mean, came here.

Pray be seated, good sir, here is the seat ready.'

And the venerable Mahā Moggallāna sat down;
and deva Tissa,
after saluting,
sat down also,
at one side.

Then said the venerable Mahā Moggallāna to deva Tissa,
so seated:

'To how many devās, Tissa,
is there this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;

in sureness we make for the awakening beyond"'?

'The Four Royal Devas, worthy sir, have this knowledge.'

■

'What, have all the Four Royal Devas this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

'No, worthy sir, not all The Four Royal Devas
have this knowledge.'

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

Those Four Royal Devas
who possess not perfect[5] faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess not perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know not that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

But those Four Royal Devas who possess perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'And is it just the Four Royal Devas who have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

Or do the devas of the Thirty also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

▪

'It is not only the Four Royal Devas, worthy sir,
who have his knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

The devas of the Thirty also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'What, have all the devas of the Thirty this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

'No, worthy sir, not all The devas of the Thirty
have this knowledge.'

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

Those devas of the Thirty
who possess not perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess not perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know not that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

But those devas of the Thirty who possess perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

■

'And is it just the Four Royal Devas, and the devas of the Thirty[ed1]
who have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

Or do Yama's devas also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

▪

'It is not only the Four Royal Devas,
and the devas of the Thirty, worthy sir,
who have his knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

The Yama's devas also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'What, have all Yama's devas this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

▪

'No, worthy sir, not all Yama's devas
have this knowledge.'

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

Those Yama's devas
who possess not perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess not perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know not that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

But those Yama's devas who possess perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'And is it just the Four Royal Devas,
and the devas of the Thirty
and Yama's devas who have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

Or do the devas of Tusita also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

▪

'It is not only the Four Royal Devas,
and the devas of the Thirty
and Yama's devas, worthy sir,
who have his knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

The devas of Tusita also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'What, have all the devas of Tusita this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

'No, worthy sir, not all the devas of Tusita
have this knowledge.'

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

Those devas of Tusita
who possess not perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess not perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know not that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

But those devas of Tusita who possess perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'And is it just the Four Royal Devas,
and the devas of the Thirty
and Yama's devas
and the devas of Tusita who have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

Or do the devas who delight in creating also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

▪

'It is not only the Four Royal Devas,
and the devas of the Thirty
and Yama's devas
and the devas of Tusita, worthy sir,
who have his knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

The devas who delight in creating also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'What, have all the devas who delight in creating this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

'No, worthy sir, not all the devas who delight in creating
have this knowledge.'

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

Those devas who delight in creating
who possess not perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess not perfect faith in the virtues,

beloved by Ariyans,
they know not that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

But those devas who delight in creating who possess perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

▪

'And is it just the Four Royal Devas,
and the devas of the Thirty
and Yama's devas
and the devas of Tusita
and the devas who delight in creating
who have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

Or do the devas who have power over others' creations
also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

▪

'It is not only the Four Royal Devas,
and the devas of the Thirty
and Yama's devas
and the devas of Tusita
and the devas who delight in creating, worthy sir,
who have his knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"

The devas who have power over others' creations
also have this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

'What, have all the devas who have power over others' creations this knowledge:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond?"'

'No, worthy sir, not all the devas who have power over others' creations have this knowledge.'

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

Those devas who have power over others' creations
who possess not perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,

possess not perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know not that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."

But those devas who have power over others' creations who possess perfect faith
in the Buddha, Dhamma and Order,
possess perfect faith in the virtues,
beloved by Ariyans,
they know that:

"We have won to the Stream;
are no more for the abyss;
in sureness we make for the awakening beyond."'

■

And the venerable Mahā Moggallāna approved and commended Brahmā Tissa's words;
and, as a strong man might stretch and bend his arm, he vanished from the Brahma world and appeared at Jeta Grove.

---

[1] Sambodhi-pārāyanā

[2] Cf. A. iv, 74, where all this recurs at Rājagaha of upādiseso and an°-. Comy. observes that Tissa was a pupil of M.'s.

[3] Mārisa Comy. in that world it is the common form of friendly greeting; but folk here say: 'Whence come you, sir? (bhavaṃ). 'Tis long since you came! How did you know the way here? What, did you go astray?' - and the like.

[4] Pariyāyaṃ Comy. vāraṃ, choice, or turn; see Dial. i, 245 n.; K.S. i, 180.

[5] Cf. S. v, 394; D. ii, 93 (as Dhammādāsa); M. ii, 51; A. ii, 56.

[ed1] This sutta both in translation and in the Pali has been abridged beyond comprehension. I have pieced it together as I believe it was originally presented. In addition I have added (to the translation only), the accumulating aspect of this line and the similar ones below. Though this feature is not hinted at in the Pali, it seems required by the sense and is not a feature of suttas that is not found elsewhere.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka-Nipāta
IV: Devatā-Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IV: The Devas

Sutta 35

Vijjā-Bhāgiya Suttaṃ

Parts of Wisdom

---

[235]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these six things are parts of wisdom.

What six?

The[1] idea of impermanence,
the idea of the Ill in impermanence,
the idea of not-self in Ill,
the idea of renunciation,
of dispassion,
of ending.

Monks, these six things are parts of wisdom.'

---

[1] D. iii, 283; A. iv, 24; on vijja-bhāgiyā see DhS. trsl. 338 n.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IV. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

IV. The Devas

Sutta 36

Vivāda-Mūla Suttaṃ

The Roots of Contention

---

[235]

Thus have I heard:

the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

2. 'Monks, these six are the roots of contention.[1]

What six?

3. Monks, suppose a monk be angry, scornful.

An he be so, he lives without reverence,
respect for the Master, Dhamma

or the Order;
he fulfils not the training.

And he who lives thus,
causes contention in the Order,
and that is to the hurt and sorrow of many folk,
to the harm of many folk,
to the hurt and ill of devas[2] and men.

Monks, if you see this root of contention among you
or among others,
strive to rid yourselves of this evil thing;
and if you see it not,
step the way to stop its future cankering.[3]

Thus is this evil root of contention rid;
and thus shall there be no future cankering.

▪

4. Again, monks, suppose a monk be a hypocrite, malicious.

An he be a hypocrite, malicious,
he lives without reverence,
respect for the Master,
Dhamma
or the Order;
he fulfils not the training.

And he who lives thus,
causes contention in the Order,
and that is to the hurt and sorrow of many folk,
to the harm of many folk,
to the hurt and ill of devas and men.

Monks, if you see this root of contention among you
or among others,
strive to rid yourselves of this evil thing;
and if you see it not,
step the way to stop its future cankering.

Thus is this evil root of contention rid;
and thus shall there be no future cankering.

▪

5. Again, monks, suppose a monk be envious, mean.

An he be envious, mean,
he lives without reverence,
respect for the Master,
Dhamma
or the Order;
he fulfils not the training.

And he who lives thus,
causes contention in the Order,
and that is to the hurt and sorrow of many folk,
to the harm of many folk,
to the hurt and ill of devas and men.

Monks, if you see this root of contention among you
or among others,
strive to rid yourselves of this evil thing;
and if you see it not,
step the way to stop its future cankering.

Thus is this evil root of contention rid;
and thus shall there be no future cankering.

▪

6. Again, monks, suppose a monk be deceitful, crafty.

An he be deceitful, crafty,
he lives without reverence,
respect for the Master,
Dhamma
or the Order;
he fulfils not the training.

And he who lives thus,
causes contention in the Order,
and that is to the hurt and sorrow of many folk,
to the harm of many folk,
to the hurt and ill of devas and men.

Monks, if you see this root of contention among you
or among others,
strive to rid yourselves of this evil thing;
and if you see it not,
step the way to stop its future cankering.

Thus is this evil root of contention rid;
and thus shall there be no future cankering.

▪

7. Again, monks, suppose a monk be evil-minded,
wrong in view.

An he be evil-minded, wrong in view,
he lives without reverence,
respect for the Master,
Dhamma
or the Order;
he fulfils not the training.

And he who lives thus,
causes contention in the Order,
and that is to the hurt and sorrow of many folk,
to the harm of many folk,
to the hurt and ill of devas and men.

Monks, if you see this root of contention among you
or among others,
strive to rid yourselves of this evil thing;
and if you see it not,
step the way to stop its future cankering.

Thus is this evil root of contention rid;
and thus shall there be no future cankering.

▪

8. Again, monks, suppose a monk be view-bound, tenacious, stubborn.[4]

An he be view-bound, tenacious, stubborn,
he lives without reverence,
respect for the Master,
Dhamma
or the Order;
he fulfils not the training.

And he who lives thus,
causes contention in the Order,
and that is to the hurt and sorrow of many folk,
to the harm of many folk,
to the hurt and ill of devas and men.

Monks, if you see this root of contention among you
or among others,
strive to rid yourselves of this evil thing;

and if [236] you see it not,
step the way to stop its future cankering.

Thus is this evil root of contention rid;
and thus shall there be no future cankering.

Verily, monks, these six are the roots of contention.'

---

[1] This recurs at D. iii, 246; M. ii, 245; Vin. ii, 89. Cf. Proverbs xxii, 10: 'Cast out the scorner, and contention shall go out.'

[2] Comy. refers us to Vin. i, 252 as to how quarrelling among monks affects devas.

[3] An-avassvāya paṭipajjeyyātha, √sru and √pad.

[4] Sandiṭṭhi-parāmāsī ādhāna-gāhī duppaṭinissaggī; cf. M. i, 42; D. iii, 46; A. v, 150. All read ādhāna-, with S.e. and Comy. but A. has v.l. ādāna. Ādāna-gāhī is 'grasping-seizing' (cf. ādāna-paṭinissagga at Dhp. 89; S. i, 236; v, 24: 'grasping-foregoing'), and our Comy. glosses: daḷha-gāhi.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IV. Devatā Vagga

Sutta 37

Jaḷaṅga-Dāna Suttaṃ

Alms

---

[236]

Thus have I heard:

Once when the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
Nanda's mother, the Veḷukaṇḍakan[1] lay disciple, founded an offering,
sixfold-endowed,
for the Order of monks with Sāriputta and Mahā Moggllāna at the head.

Now the Exalted One, with the deva-eye, surpassing in clarity the eye of man,
saw that Nanda's mother, the Veḷukaṇḍakan lay disciple, had founded an offering,
sixfold-endowed,
for the Order of monks with Sāriputtaand Mahā Moggllāna at the head, and addressed the monks thus:

Monks, this lay-disciple of Veḷukaṇḍakan, Nanda's mother, has founded an offering,

sixfold-endowed,
for the Order of monks
with Sāriputta and Mahā Mogglāna at the head.

▪

And how, monks, is the offering[2] sixfold-endowed?

Monks, the giver's part is threefold and the receivers' part is threefold.

▪

And what is the giver's threefold part?

Herein, monks, before the gift[3]
he is glad at heart[4]
in giving the heart[4] is satisfied;
and uplifted is the heart when he has given.

This is the giver's threefold part.

▪

And what is the receivers' threefold part?

Herein, monks, they are lust-freed or stepping to cast lust out;
are hate-freed or stepping to cast hate out;
are delusion-freed or stepping to become so.

This is the receivers' threefold part.

▪

Thus the giver's part is threefold
and the receivers' part is threefold;

thus verily, monks, the offering is sixfold-endowed.

§

Monks, not easy is it to grasp the measure of merit of such a sixfold-endowed offering,
and to say:

"Thus much is the yield in merit,
the yield in goodliness,
making for a lucky hereafter,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
leading [237] to weal and happiness,
longed for,
loved
and lovely."

Verily, the great mass of merit is reckoned just unreckonable, immeasurable.

▪

Monks, just[5] as it is not easy to grasp the measure of water in the great ocean, and to say:

"There are so many pailfuls,
so many hundreds of pailfuls,
so many thousands of pailfuls,
so many hundreds of thousands of pailfuls" -

for that great mass of water is reckoned unreckonable,
immeasurable;

even so, monks, it is not easy to grasp the measure of merit
in a sixfold-endowed offering,
and to say:

"Thus much is the yield in merit,
the yield in goodliness,
making for a lucky hereafter,
ripening to happiness,
leading heavenward,
leading to weal and happiness,
longed for,
loved
and lovely."

Gladsome before the gift, giving satisfied,
Uplifted having given-that's bounty's[6] fullness.[7]
Lust-freed, hate-freed, delusion-freed, stainless, Controlled Brahma-wayfarers[8]- that's the best field for bounty.
If one but cleanse[9] himself and give by hand,
For self hereafter, [10]too, great is the fruit.
So giving-faithful, wise, heart-free, discreet -
In the sorrowless, happy world he'll rise.'[11]

---

[1] See G.S. i, 24; Brethr. 41; A. iv, 63; K.S. ii, 160 (there -kaṇṭkī).

[2] Dakkhiṇā.

[3] Dāna.

[4] Mano, then cititaṃ.

[5] See above, p. 43, n. 2.

[6] Yaññа.

[7] Sampadā. Comy. paripuṇṇatā, fulfilment.

[8] Saññatā brahmacārayo, restrained god-way-ers.

[9] The Comy. takes this literally: washing his feet and hands, rinsing his/mouth.

[10] Parato ca. Comy. is silent.

[11] The last line of the text recurs at It. 16 and 52.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IV. Devatā Vagga

Sutta 38

Atta-Kāra Suttaṃ

Self-Acting

---

[237]

Now a certain brāhman visited the Exalted One, greeted him and, after exchanging the usual polite talk, sat down at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted One:

'This, Master Gotama, is my avowal, this my view:

There is no self-agency;
no other agency.'[1]

[238] 'Never, brāhman, have I seen or heard of such an avowal, such a view.

■

Pray, how can one[2] step onwards, how can one step back,
yet say:

'There is no self-agency;
there is no other agency?'

§

What think you, brāhman, is there such a thing as initiative?'[3]

'Yes, sir.'

'That being so, are men known to initiate?'

Yes, sir.'

'Well, brāhman, since there is initiative and men are known to initiate,
this is among men the self-agency,
this is the other agency.

▪

What think you, brāhman, is there such a thing as stepping[2] away?

'Yes, sir.'

'That being so, are men known to step away?'

Yes, sir.'

'Well, brāhman, since there is stepping away,
and men are known to step away,
this is among men the self-agency,
this is the other agency.

▪

What think you, brāhman, is there such a thing as stepping forth?

'Yes, sir.'

'That being so, are men known to step forth?'

Yes, sir.'

'Well, brāhman, since there is stepping forth, and men are known to step forth,
this is among men the self-agency,
this is the other agency.

▪

What think you, brāhman, is there such a thing as halting?[4]

'Yes, sir.'

'That being so, are men known to halt?'

Yes, sir.'

'Well, brāhman, since there is halting,
and men are known to halt,
this is among men the self-agency,
this is the other agency.

▪

What think you, brāhman, is there such a thing as standing?

'Yes, sir.'

'That being so, are men known to stand?'

Yes, sir.'

'Well, brāhman, since there is standing,
and men are known to stand,

this is among men the self-agency,
this is the other agency.

▪

What think you, brāhman, is there such a thing as stepping towards anything?

'Yes, sir.'

'That being so, are men known to stepping towards?'

Yes, sir.'

'Well, brāhman, since there is stepping towards,
and men are known to step towards,
this is among men the self-agency,
this is the other agency.

▪

Never, brāhman, have I seen or heard of such an avowal, such a view as yours.

Pray, how can one step onwards,[5] step back and say:

'There is no self-agency,
there is no other-agency?'"

§

'This, indeed, is wonderful,[5] Master Gotama!

This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma
has been blazed abroad by Master Gotama
in manifold ways.

'I, Master Gotama,
go to Master Gotama for refuge,
to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;
let Master Gotama look upon me as a lay-disciple,
to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

---

[1] This is Makkhali Gosala's heresy; see Dial. i, 71; K.S. iii, 169; P.E.D. s.v. atta and para- seems to interpret atta-kāra, para- wrongly; see DA. i, 160. Crit. Pāli Dict. has 'own act'; so Nyāṇatiloka.

[2] √kram, to walk, with the prefixes abhi, paṭī, nis, parā and upa.

[3] Ārabbhadhātu: ārabbha, gerund of ārādheti, to set on foot; dhātu, element, property, condition. Comy. sabhāva, 'essence.'

[4] Thāma and ṭhiti, both from √sthā; the former is, I suppose, a causative formation.

[5] Abhikkamanto and abhikkantaṅ, respectively. Were the latter not 'stock,' we might see a pun here in abhikkantaṅ, which means equally 'going forward' (kram) and 'very charming' (kānta).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IV. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

IV. The Devas

Sutta 39

Kamma-Nidāna Suttaṃ

The Means[1]

---

[239]

Thus have I heard:

The Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

2. 'Monks, there are these three means to heap up[2] deeds.

What three?

Greed is a means to heap up deeds;
hate is a means to heap up deeds;
delusion is a means to heap up deeds.

■

Monks, not from greed
does not-greed heap up, but from greed surely greed heaps up;
not[3] from hate
does not-hate heap up,
but from hate surely hate heaps up;
not from delusion
does non-delusion heap up, but from delusion surely delusion heaps up.

▪

Monks, not of deeds,
greed-born,
hate-born,
delusion-born,
are devas,
are men,
nor they who fare along the happy way;
monks, of deeds born of greed, hate,
delusion,
hell is,
brute-birth is,
the ghost-realm is,
and they who fare along the evil way.

Verify, monks, these are the three means to heap up deeds.

§

Monks, there are these three means
to heap up deeds.

What three?

Not-greed is a means to heap up deeds;
not-hate is a means to heap up deeds;
non-delusion is a means to heap up deeds.

▪

Monks, not from not-greed does greed heap up,
but from not-greed surely not-greed heaps up;
not from not-hate does hate heap up,
but from not-hate surely not-hate heaps up;
not from non-delusion does delusion heap up,
but from non delusion surely non-delusion heaps up.

▪

Monks, not of deeds,
born of not-greed,
not-hate,
non-delusion,
is hell,
brute-birth,
the ghost-realm,
nor they who fare along the evil way;
monks, of deeds, born of not-greed,
not-hate,
non-delusion,
devas are,
men are,
and they who fare along the happy way.

Verily, monks, these are the three means
to heap up deeds.'

---

[1] Nidāna, binding on to, √dā, cause.

[2] Samudaya. Comy. piṇḍa-karaṇ' atthāya (snow)-ball-like. Cf. Ecclesiastes ii, 26.

[3] Dhp. 5 of vera.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IV. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

The Devas

Kimbila Suttaṃ

Sutta 40

The Venerable Kimbila

---

[239]

[1]Thus have I said:

Once, when the Exalted One dwelt at Kimbilā in Bamboo Grove,[1]
the venerable Kimbila visited [240] him and, after saluting,
sat down at one side.

So seated, the venerable Kimbila[2] said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, what reason is there,
what cause,
whereby, when the Tathāgata has passed away, Saddhamma shall not endure?'

▪

'Consider, Kimbila, monk, nun and lay-disciple, man and woman, how, when the Tathāgata has passed away,
they may dwell without reverence, without respect for the Master;
without reverence, without respect for Dhamma;

without reverence, without respect for the Order;
without reverence, without respect for the training;
without reverence, without respect for zeal;
without reverence, without respect for goodwill.

This, Kimbila, is a reason,
this a cause,
whereby, when the Tathāgata has passed away, Saddhamma shall not endure.'

§

'But what reason is there, lord,
what cause,
whereby, when the Tathāgata has passed away,
Saddhamma shall endure?

▪

'Kimbila, let monk and nun, lay-disciple, man and woman, live with reverence and respect for the Master,
with reverence and respect for the Dhamma,
with reverence and respect for the Order,
with reverence and respect for the training, with reverence and respect for zeal and with reverence and respect for good-will;
and it shall be a reason,
a cause,
whereby, when the Tathāgata has passed away,
Saddhamma shall endure.'

[1] So text; Comy. and S.e. Nicula; cf. S. v, 322.

[2] A Sakyan who joined the Order with Ānanda (Vin. ii, 182); he was presumably much exercised over this matter, for cf. V, § 201 (A. iii, 247 [AN 5.201]) and A. iv, 84. [AN 7.56] Cf. also K.S. ii, 152; v, 151.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IV. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

IV. The Devas

Sutta 41

Dāru-k-Khandha Suttaṃ

The Log of Wood

---

[240]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the venerable Sāriputta dwelt on Mount vulture Peak near Rājagaha, he robed early and, taking bowl and cloak, descended the hill
with many monks in company.

Now at a certain spot
the venerable Sāriputta saw a large log of wood;
and there he addressed the monks and said:

'See you, reverend sirs, that large log of wood?'

'Yes, sir,' they replied.

'An adept[1] monk, reverend sirs,
won to mind-control,

can, if he wish,
view[2] it as earth.

Wherefore?

There is, sirs,
[241] in that log of wood
the earth element;
hence an adept can view it as earth.

▪

An adept monk, reverend sirs,
won to mind-control,
can, if he wish, view it as water.

Wherefore?

There is, sirs,
in that log of wood
the water element;
hence an adept can view it as water.

▪

An adept monk, reverend sirs,
won to mind-control,
can, if he wish, view it as fire.

Wherefore?

There is, sirs,
in that log of wood
the fire element;
hence an adept can view it as fire.

▪

An adept monk, reverend sirs,
won to mind-control,
can, if he wish, view it as air.

Wherefore?

There is, sirs,
in that log of wood
the air element;
hence an adept can view it as air.

▪

An adept monk, reverend sirs,
won to mind-control,
can, if he wish, view it as beautiful.

Wherefore?

There is, sirs,
in that log of wood
the element of beauty;
hence an adept can view it as beautiful.

▪

An adept monk, reverend sirs,
won to mind-control,
can, if he wish, view it as ugly.

Wherefore?

There is, sirs,
in that log of wood
the element of beauty;
hence an adept can view it as beautiful.

[1] Iddhimā.

[2] Adhimucceyya. Comy. sallakkheyya, ? trace therein.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IV. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IV: The Devas

Sutta 42

Nāgita Suttaṃ

The Venerable Nāgita

---

[241]

Thus have I said:[ed1]

Once[1] the Exalted One walked a walk
with a great company of monks
among the Kosalese
and came to a Kosalan brahman village called Icchānangala.

And there in the Icchānaṇgala grove the Exalted One dwelt.

Now the brahman householders of that place heard:

'The recluse, Master Gotama,
the Sakya,
gone forth from the Sakya clan, has arrived at Icchānaṇgala and stays in the grove hard by;
and of that same Master Gotama this fair report is noised abroad:

"He is the Exalted One,
arahant,
perfectly enlightened,

endowed with wisdom and righteousness,
one well-gone,
a world-knower,
the unsurpassed,
a tamer of tamable men,
a teacher,
a Buddha of devas and men,
the Exalted One!

Having realized more-knowledge himself,
he declares it to this world
with its devas
and Māras
and Brahmas,
to this earth with its recluses and brahmans,
its devas and men;
and he teaches Dhamma,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle
and lovely in the end;
and sets forth the godly life,
utterly pure and perfect,
both in spirit and letter.

Well indeed is it to see such arahants!"'

▪

Then at dawn
those brahman householders went to the grove, taking with them much hard and soft food;
and they stood at the gateway making a great tumult.

▪

Now at that time the venerable Nāgita served the Exalted One.

Then said the Exalted One to the venerable Nāgita:

'What is this great tumult, Nāgita?

'Tis as though fisher-folk had caught a great haul!'

▪

'These, lord, are the Icchānaṇgala brahman householders, who have brought much hard and soft food for the Exalted One
and the monks;
and they now stand without.'

▪

'I have naught to do with homage, Nāgita,
nor need I homage.

▪

Whosoever cannot obtain at will,
freely,
readily,
the ease of renunciation,
the ease of seclusion,
the ease of calm,
the ease of enlightenment,
as I can,
let him wallow[2] [242] in that dung-like[3] ease,
that clog[4] of ease,
that ease gotten of gains,
favours
and flattery.'

▪

'Lord, let the Exalted One accept their offering now;
let the Well-gone accept!

Lord, now is the time to accept;
for whither soever the Exalted One shall henceforth go,
the brahman householders of town and countryside
shall be so inclined.

Lord, just as when the rain-deva rains abundantly,
the waters flow with the incline;
even so, lord,
whither soever the Exalted One shall henceforth go,
the brahman householders of town and countryside
shall be so inclined.

And why?

So great, lord, is the Exalted One's virtue and wisdom.'

▪

'I have naught to do with homage, Nāgita,
nor need I homage;
but whosoever cannot obtain at will,
freely,
readily,
the ease of renunciation,
seclusion,
calm,
enlightenment,
as I can,
let him wallow in that dung-like ease,
that clog of ease,
that ease gotten of gains,
favours
and flattery.

▪

Suppose, Nagita, I see a monk seated,
rapt,
on the outskirts of some village;
then I think:

"Presently a park-man or a novice
will disturb the reverend sir and will oust him from that concentration."

So, Nāgita, I am not pleased with that monk's abode.

-○-

Or I see one forest-gone, seated nodding in the forest;
then I think:

"Presently he will dispel sleep and fatigue, attend to the forest-sense[5] and solitude."

So, Nāgita, I am pleased with his forest-abiding.

-○-

Or I see one forest-gone,
seated,
rapt;
then I think:

"Presently he will compose the uncomposed mind

or will continue to ward the freed mind."

So, Nāgita, I am pleased
with his forest-abiding.

-○-

Or I see one living on a village outskirts, getting the requisites:
robe,
alms,
bed
and medicaments;
and, delighting in those gains,
favours
and flattery,
he neglects to go apart,
neglects the forest,
the woodland ways,
the lonely lodgings;
he gets his living
by visiting village,
town
and capital.

So, Nāgita, I am not pleased with his abiding.

-○-

Or I see a monk,
forest-gone,
getting the requisites,
but staving off gains,
favours
and flattery,

neglecting not to go [243] apart, neglecting not the woodland ways,
the lonely lodgings.

So, Nāgita,
I am pleased with that monk's forest-abiding.

-○-

But when walking along the highway, Nāgita,
I see nothing whatever in front nor behind,
it suits[6] me,
even over the calls of nature.'

---

[1] This sutta with two more items and some variation recurs at A. iv, 340; see above, Fives, § 30.

[2] Sādiyeyya, no doubt from √svad, but possibly from √sad.

[3] Mīḷha.

[4] Middha-

[5] Arañña-saññaṃ. Cf. Th. I, ver. 110.

[6] Phāsu me; one wonders what he would have thought modem highways suitable for!

[ed1] In this single case Hare has used this translation. Otherwise he uses 'Thus have I heard'.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Nāga Suttaṃ

Sutta 43

The Elephant[1]

---

[243]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One dwelt near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park,
he robed early and,
with cloak and bowl,
entered Sāvatthī for alms.

And having gone his round in Sāvatthī,
on his return,
after his meal,
he said to the venerable Ānanda:

'Let us go, Ānanda,
to Migāra's mother's terraced house in East Park,
where, when we are come,
we will spend the noontide.'

'Yes, lord,'replied the venerable Ānanda;
and the Exalted One went there with him.

Then in the evening the Exalted One, risen from solitude,
said to him:

'Come, Ānanda,
we will go to the bathing-place[2]
and bathe our limbs.'

'Yes, lord,' he replied;
and they went there together.

And when he had bathed and come out,
the Exalted One stood in a single garment, drying himself.[3]

Now at that time Seta,
an elephant of rajah Pasenadi of Kosala, came out of the bathing-place to the sound of many drums and all kinds of music;
and folk about,
marvelling[4] at the sight,
said:

'What a beauty, sirs, is the rajah's elephant;
what a picture;
what a treat for the eye;
what a body he has!

The elephant, sirs,
is indeed an elephant!'[5]

[244] And when this had been said, the venerable Udāyin[6] spoke thus to the Exalted One:

'Lord, do folk say:

The elephant is indeed an elephant,
only on seeing the huge, gross bulk of an elephant, or do they say it
on seeing other gross, bulky things?

Folk say it, Udāyin,
when they see the huge, gross bulk of an elephant;
they say it, too,
when they see a huge horse or a bull
or a snake
or a tree;
they say:

The nāga,
indeed is a nāga!"

even when they see a huge man with a gross, fat body.

But I declare, Udāyin, that in the deva-world
with its Māras and Brahmās, and on earth with its recluses, godly men,
devas and men -
he who commits no enormity[7]
in deed,
word
or thought,
he is a nāga.'

It is marvellous and amazing, lord -
I mean these noble words of the Exalted One:

"I declare that in the deva-world or on earth
he who commits no enormity
in deed,
word
or thought,
he is a nāga.

'And now, lord,
I will give thanks in verse
for the Exalted One's noble words:

A man and very[8] Buddha he, self-tamed,
Composed, who treads the deathless path, serene
In joy, transcending all; whom men adore,
Whom devas laud-thus have I heard of him,
The Arahant.[9] All fetters he hath left,
From jungle to Nibbāna[10] come, his joy lives in renouncing worldly lusts; as gold
From quarried quartz, that naga outshines all;
As Himalaya[11] o'er other crags-whose name
Is Truth o'er tops all nāgas so yclept.
[245] Lo! I will limn this naga-elephant,
Who no enormity commits; Mildness
And harmlessness his forefeet are, his hinder Austerity and godly life; be-trunked
With faith, white-tusked with equanimity,
His neck is mindfulness, his head is insight;
Each Dhamma-thought's a test;[12] and Dhamma's garner[13]
His belly is, his tail is solitude.
Rapt muser, calm, well self-composed, whose breath
Is zest[14]-that nāga walks composed, composed
He stands, composed he lies, composed he sits,
A nāga e'er controlled - for he is perfect.
Blameless he feeds, nor feeds on foolishness;

Ration and robe he gets and shuns the hoard;
He snappeth every tie, bonds fine and coarse;
He goes wherever he will, he goes care-free.
See how the lovely lotus, water-born,
Sweet-scented, ne'er by water is defiled:[15]
The Buddha, born as very[16] man, puts by
The world and by the world is undefiled,
As lily by the water of the lake.
As blazing fire goes out through want of fuel,
And men, of ashes,[17] say: "The fire's gone out!" -
This is a parable of rare presage,[18]
[246] Taught by wise men-great nāgas by a nāga
Are recognized when by a nāga[19] taught - Lust-freed, hate-freed, delusion-freed, stainless,[20]
This nāga, body-freed, shall "go out"[21] freed.'

---

[1] Nāgo, elephant, serpent and fairy-demon; a phenomenon, prodigy.

[2] Pubbakoṭṭhaka; see n. at K.S. v, 195; but it can hardly refer to a gateway here, but simply an enclosure (precinct).

[3] All this recurs at M. i, 161; cf. also S. i, 8; below, § 62.

[4] Api'ssu.

[5] Nāgo vata bho nāgo.

[6] Comy. Kāl'Udāyin; see Brethr. 287 (the verses recur there, Thag. 689-704); O.S. I, 20, Comy. explains that 500 monks accompanied the Buddha.

[7] Āguṃ na karoti, taṃ nāgo The poet is less crude in Th. 693; na hi āguṃ karoti so. Cf. Sn. 522.

[8] Sam-buddha.

[9] Arahato. Brethr. 'I, an arahant.'

[10] S.e. and Thag. vanā nibbanaṃ āgataṃ.

[11] Text himavā'ññe, S.e. maññe, Comy. so, with v.l. 'v'aññe with Thag., which is no doubt correct; In Sinhalese script v, c and m are somewhat similar.

[12] Vīmaṃsā dhamma-cintanā. Comy. likens this to the elephant feeling with his trunk; vīmaṃsā, investigation, is one of the four Iddhipādas; see V, § 67.

[13] Text reads samātapo, v.l. samācāpo; but Comy. and S.e. samāvāpo, explaining: kucchi yeva samāvāpo, samāvāpo nāma samāvāpana-ṭṭhānaṃ. P.E.D. omits, but the compound seams to occur in Skt.; see Macdonell's Dict. s.v. √vap. At M. i, 451 we have samavāpaka, a store-room; Thag. reads samāvāso.

[14] Assāsa-rato. Comy. refers this to the assāsa-passāsa exercises; see K.S. v, 257 ff.

[15] Cf. Sn. 547; A. ii, 39; Chān. Up. S.B.E. i, 67; Bhag. Gītā, 5,10.

[16] Su-jāto; see P.E.D. s.v. su as to its use as sam-.

[17] Text and S.e. sankhāresūpasantesu, but Thag. with our v.l. angāresu ca santesu, which I follow.

[18] The text reads atth'assāyaṃ viññāpanī for atthassāyaṃ; cf. D. i, 114; M. ii, 260.

[19] Text misprints nāyena for nāgena.

[20] Cf. above VI, § 37.

[21] Comy., S.e. and Thag. parinibbissati. The thera is here no doubt prophesying, so above I take attha as presage.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Migasālā Suttaṃ

Sutta 44

Migasālā[1]

---

[246]

Thus have I heard:

One morning the venerable Ānanda, robing early,
took bowl and cloak
and went to the house of the lay disciple, Migasālā,
and there sat down on seat made ready.

And Migasālā came
and saluted him
and sat down at one side.

So seated, she said to the venerable Ānanda:

'Pray, reverend sir,
how ought one to understand this Dhamma
taught by the Exalted One:
that both he who lives the godly life
and he who does not
shall become like-wayfarers
in the world to come?

My father, sir, Purāṇa,[2]
lived the godly life,
dwelling apart,
abstaining from common,
carnal things;
and when he died,
the Exalted One explained:

He's a Once-returner,
dwelling in Tusita.

My uncle,[3] sir, Isidatta,
did not live the godly life
but rejoiced with a wife;
and of him also,
when dead,
the Exalted One said:

He's a Once-returner,
dwelling in Tusita.

Reverend Ānanda, how ought one to understand this Dhamma
taught by the Exalted One:
that both he who lives the godly life
and he who does not
shall become like-wayfarers
in the world to come?

'Even, sister, as the Exalted One has said.'[4]

§

'And when the venerable Ānanda had received alms in Migasālā's house,
he rose from his seat and departed.

Now on his return from alms-gathering,
after his meal,
the venerable Ānanda visited the Exalted One,
saluted him
[247] and sat down at one side;
and so seated,
he said this to the Exalted One:

This morning, lord, robing early,
I took bowl and cloak
and went to the house of the lay disciple, Migasālā,
and there sat down on seat made ready.

And Migasālā came
and saluted me
and sat down at one side.

So seated, she said to me:

'Pray, reverend sir,
how ought one to understand this Dhamma
taught by the Exalted One:
that both he who lives the godly life
and he who does not
shall become like-wayfarers
in the world to come?

My father, sir,
lived the godly life,
dwelling apart,
abstaining from common,
carnal things;
and when he died,
the Exalted One explained:

He's a Once-returner,
dwelling in Tusita.

My uncle, sir, Isidatta,
did not live the godly life
but rejoiced with a wife;
and of him also,
when dead,
the Exalted One said:

He's a Once-returner,
dwelling in Tusita.

Reverend Ānanda, how ought one to understand this Dhamma
taught by the Exalted One:
that both he who lives the godly life
and he who does not
shall become like-wayfarers
in the world to come?

'I told her, lord,
to understand the matter
even as the Exalted One had explained.'

▪

'But, Ānanda, who is the lay-disciple, Migasālā -
a foolish,
frail,
motherly body
with but mother-wit -
to understand the diversity in the person of man?[5]

These six persons, Ānanda, are found in the world.

What six?

Consider, Ānanda, one
well restrained,
a comely person,
in whose company
his fellows in the godly life
take pleasure;
yet in whom hearing (Dhamma) is of none effect,
much learning is of none effect,[6]
in whom there is no view-penetration,
who wins not temporary release[7] -
he, on the breaking up of the body after death,
sets out to fall,
not to excel;
fares to a fall,
fares not to excellence.

▪

Consider another
well restrained,
a comely person,
in whose company
his fellows in the godly life
take pleasure;
but in whom hearing (Dhamma) has effect,
much learning has effect,
in whom there is view-penetration,
who wins temporary release -
he, on the breaking up of the body after death,
sets out to excel,
not to fall;
fares to excellence,
not to a fall.

▪

And the measurers measure them, saying:

"His stature[8] is just this,
the other's just that;
in what way is[9] one wanting,
one exalted?"

And that measuring, Ānanda,
is to the measurers' harm and hurt
for many a day.

▪

Now the one
well restrained,
a comely person,
in whose company
his fellows in the godly life
take pleasure;
but in whom hearing (Dhamma) has effect,
much learning has effect,
in whom there is view-penetration,
who wins temporary release -
that person, Ānanda,
has marched further forward,
is more exalted than the former.

And why [248] is that?

The stream of Dhamma carries him forward,[10] Ānanda.

But who save the Tathāgata
can judge that difference?[11]

▪

Wherefore, Ānanda,
be no measurer of persons;
measure not the measure of persons;
verily, Ānanda,
he digs[12] a pit for himself
who measures the measure of persons.

I alone, Ānanda,
can measure their measure -
or one like me.

§

Consider, Ānanda, a person
in whom wrath and pride are conquered,
but in whom greed
from time to time surges;
yet in whom hearing (Dhamma) is of none effect,
much learning is of none effect,
in whom there is no view-penetration,
who wins not temporary release -
he, on the breaking up of the body after death,
sets out to fall,
not to excel;
fares to a fall,
fares not to excellence.

▪

Consider another person
in whom wrath and pride are conquered,
but in whom greed
from time to time surges;

but in whom hearing (Dhamma) has effect,
much learning has effect,
in whom there is view-penetration,
who wins temporary release -
he, on the breaking up of the body after death,
sets out to excel,
not to fall;
fares to excellence,
not to a fall.

▪

And the measurers measure them, saying:

"His stature is just this,
the other's just that;
in what way is one wanting,
one exalted?"

And that measuring, Ānanda,
is to the measurers' harm and hurt
for many a day.

▪

Now the one
in whom wrath and pride are conquered,
but in whom greed
from time to time surges;
but in whom hearing (Dhamma) has effect,
much learning has effect,
in whom there is view-penetration,
who wins temporary release -
that person has marched further forward,
is more exalted than the former.

And why is that?

The stream of Dhamma carries him forward, Ānanda.

But who save the Tathāgata
can judge that difference?

▪

Wherefore, Ānanda,
be no measurer of persons;
measure not the measure of persons;
verily, Ānanda,
he digs a pit for himself
who measures the measure of persons.

I alone, Ānanda,
can measure their measure -
or one like me.

§

Consider one
in whom wrath and pride are conquered,
but in whom the whirl[13] of words
from time to time surges;
yet in whom hearing (Dhamma) is of none effect,
much learning is of none effect,
in whom there is no view-penetration,
who wins not temporary release -
he, on the breaking up of the body after death,
sets out to fall,
not to excel;
fares to a fall,
fares not to excellence.

▪

Consider another and another
in whom wrath and pride are conquered,
but in whom the whirl of words
from time to time surges;
but in whom hearing (Dhamma) has effect,
much learning has effect,
in whom there is view-penetration,
who wins temporary release -
he, on the breaking up of the body after death,
sets out to excel,
not to fall;
fares to excellence,
not to a fall.

▪

And the measurers measure them, saying:

"His stature is just this,
the other's just that;
in what way is one wanting,
one exalted?"

And that measuring, Ānanda,
is to the measurers' harm and hurt
for many a day.

▪

Now the one
in whom wrath and pride are conquered,
but in whom the whirl of words
from time to time surges;
but in whom hearing (Dhamma) has effect,
much learning has effect,

in whom there is view-penetration,
who wins temporary release -,
is more exalted than the former.

And why is that?

The stream of Dhamma carries him forward, Ānanda.

But who save the Tathāgata
can judge this difference?

▪

Wherefore, Ānanda,
be no measurer of persons;
measure not the measure of persons.

Verily, Ānanda,
he digs a pit for himself
who measures the measure of persons.

[249] I alone, Ānanda,
can measure their measure -
or one like me.

§

And who is the lay disciple, Migasālā -
a foolish,
frail,
motherly body
with but mother-wit -

to understand the diversity in the person of man?

Verily, Ānanda,
these six persons are found in the world.

§

Ānanda, with such virtue as Purāṇa was endowed, Isidatta may become endowed;
herein Purāṇa fares not Isidatta's way but another's:
with such insight as Isidatta was endowed, Purāṇa may become endowed;
herein Isidatta fares not Purāṇa's way but another's.

Thus verily, Ānanda,
both these men are wanting in one thing.

---

[1] Cf. the whole sutta with A. v, 137 ff.

[2] These two brothers were the rajah Pasenadi's chamberlains or chariot makers; see K.S. v, 303 ff.

[3] Text petteyyo piyo with S.e., see Childers; but at A. v, pettāpiyo with Tr. P.M. 62,16.

[4] Comy. observes that Ānanda did not know the answer.

[5] The construction is peculiar (cf. A. iii, 237) Kā ca Migasālā ... ambakā, ambakapaññā (Comy., S.e. and A. v, so for saññā) ke ca purisapuggala- paropariyañāṇe (Cf. K.S. v, 270, § 10) Purisa-puggala is possibly a transition from the more honourable purisa to the puggala, male, adopted by the Saṅgha when 'the man' concept was worsening.

[6] Comy. ettha bahusaccaṃ vuccatī viriyaṃ viriyena kattabba-yuttakaṃ akataṃ hoti. (Cf. Locke's definition of 'effect': the substance produced into any subject by the exerting of power. - Webster's Eng. Dict.)

[7] Cf. above, p. 131, n. 1.

[8] Dhammā.

[9] Kasmā.

[10] Dhamma-soto nibbahati. Comy. Sūraṃ hutvā pavattamānaṃ vipassanāñāṇaṃ nibbhati, ariya-bhūmiṃ sampāpeti. Nibbahati is either from √barh, to increase, or √vah, to carry, with nis, 'out,' 'to completion.'

[11] Reading tadantaraṃ, with S.e. and Comy. taṃ antaraṃ, taṃ kāraṇaṃ.

[12] Khaññati. Comy. guṇa-khaṇanaṃ pāpuṇāti.

[13] Vacī-sanhhārā, speech activities; see Vism. 531, trsl. 633.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Iṇa suttaṃ

Sutta 45

The Debt

---

[249]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, is poverty a woeful thing for a worldly wanton?'

'Surely, lord.'

▪

'And when a man is poor,
needy,

in straits,[1]
he gets into debt;
and is that woeful too?'

'Surely, lord.'

▪

'And when he gets into debt, he borrows;[2]
and is that woeful to?'

'Surely, lord.'

▪

'And when the bill falls due,[3]
he pays not
and they press[4] him;
is that woeful too?'

'Surely, lord.'

▪

'And when pressed,
he pays not
and they beset[5] him;
is that woeful to?'

'Surely, lord.'

▪

'And when beset,
he pays not

and they bind him;
is that woeful too?'

'Surely, lord.'

[250] 'Thus, monks, poverty, debt,
borrowing,
being pressed,
beset
and bound
are all woes for the worldly wanton.

§

Monks, it is just the same for anyone who has no faith in right things, is not conscientious about right things,
has no fear of blame about right things,
no energy for right things,
no insight into right things;
he is said to be poor,
needy,
in straits,
in the Ariyan discipline.

§

Now that very man -
poor,
needy,
in straits,
wanting in faith concerning right things,
wanting in conscientiousness concerning right things, wanting in fear of blame concerning right things, wanting in energy concerning right things wanting in insight concerning right things - works evilly in deed,
word
and thought.

I call that his getting into debt.

▪

And to cloak[6] his evil deeds,
he lays hold
upon false hope.[7]

"Let none know[8] this of me,"
he hopes;

"Let none know this of me,"
he resolves;

"Let none know this of me,"
he says;

"Let none know this of me,"
he strives in act.

-○-

And to cloak his evil words,
he lays hold

upon false hope.

"Let none know this of me,"
he hopes;

"Let none know this of me,"
he resolves;

"Let none know this of me,"
he says;

"Let none know this of me,"
he strives in act.

-○-

And to cloak his evil his evil thoughts,
he lays hold
upon false hope.

"Let none know this of me,"
he hopes;

"Let none know this of me,"
he resolves;

"Let none know this of me,"
he says;

"Let none know this of me,"
he strives in act.

I call that his borrowing.

§

Then his pious fellows in the godly life say thus:

"This venerable sir
acts in this sort,
carries on in this way."

I call that his being pressed.

▪

Then, gone to forest,
tree-root
or lonely place,
evil,
unrighteous thoughts
and attendant remorse pursue him.

I call that his being beset.

▪

And that man, monks -
poor,
needy,
in straits -
having worked evilly in deed,
word
and thought,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
is bound in hell's bonds
or the bonds of some beast's womb;
and I see no other single bondage, monks,[9]
so harsh,
so bitter,

such a bar
to winning the unsurpassed peace from effort -
I mean,
hell's bonds
or the bonds of a beast's womb.

Woeful i'the world is poverty and debt
'Tis said. See[10] how the poor wanton, plunged in debt, Suffers, is then beset, e'en bound with bonds -
A woe indeed for one who pleasure craves!
So in the Ariyan discipline, who lives
Sans faith, sans shame, sans fear of blame, fashions[11] [251] Ill deeds and, working evilly in deed,
In word and thought, hopes none shall know of it.
Wavering[12] in deed, in word, in thought, he breeds[13]
A brood of evil deeds, here, there, again -
Fool, evil-doer, who knows his own misdeeds,
He suffers as the wanton, plunged in debt!
Longings and evil thoughts in forest, town,
Beset him then, with black remorse's horde[14] -
Fool, evil-doer, who knows his own misdeeds,
For him a beast's womb waits or bonds in hell;
Those woeful bonds from which the sage is freed.

Who, gladdening, gives from plenty, justly won,
Casting a win both ways[15]-believing man,
Seeker of homely joys - for him here's weal,
Hereafter, bliss. Such is the goodman's standard,
For merit grows by generosity.[16]
So in the Ariyan discipline, who's set
In faith, wise, modest and by virtue ruled,

Is called "blythe dweller" in that discipline.
Erstwhile unsullied bliss he wins, then poise
Preserves;[17] the five bars[18] passed, with ardent zeal,
The musings enters, watchful, apt, intent;
Breaks all the bonds and knows reality;
And grasping naught, wholly his heart's released.
If in that high release, where life's[19] bonds break,
This gnosis comes: "Immutable's release!"
Then is that gnosis final, unsurpassed
That bliss, a griefless state of passionless peace - That (for the saint) is doubtlessness supreme.'

---

[1] S.e. with text anāḷiko, Comy. anāḷhiyo; see P.E.D. s.v.

[2] Vaḍḍhiṃ paṭisuṇāti.

[3] Kālābhataṃ vaḍḍhiṃ. P.E.D. omits.

[4] Codenti, √cud, to urge; cf. Sn. 120.

[5] Anucaranti pi nap. Comy. they dog his footsteps and vex him, throwing mud at him in public or in a crowd, and do like things that cause pain (ātapa-ṭṭhapana-).

[6] Paṭicchādana-hetu.

[7] Pāpikaṃ icchaṃ paṇidahati; cf. Hebrews vi, 18.

[8] With Comy. and S.e. jaññā; see Sn. loc. cit.

[9] Cf. S. ii, 226 ff.

[10] Cf. Proverbs xxi, 25-26.

[11] Vinicchayo. Comy. vaḍḍhako.

[12] Saṃsappati. Comy. paripphandati; cf. A. v, 289; James i, 6.

[13] Pāpakammaṃ pavaḍḍhento

[14] Yaaaa vippaṭisāra-jā. Comy. ye assa vippaṭisārato jātā.

[15] Ubhayattha kaṭaṁggāha; cf. Thag. 462; S. iv, 352; J. iv, 322: referring to throwing dice.

[16] The two lines of the text recur at A. iv, 285; cf. also J.P.T.S., 1909 336.

[17] Comy. observes that these two refer to the third and fourth musings.

[18] Viz. lust, ill-will, torpor, worry and doubt.

[19] Bhava, becoming.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Mahā Cunda Suttaṃ

Sutta 46

Mahā Cunda

---

[252]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Mahā Cunda[1] was staying among the Cetis[2] at Sahajāti.[3]
and there he spoke to the monks, saying:

"Monks, reverend sirs!'

'Reverend sir!' they rejoined;
and the venerable Mahā Cunda said:

'There are some monks, Dhamma-zealots,[4]
who blame musers, saying:

"These fellows say:

'We are musers, we are musers!'

They muse and are bemused![5]

And what do they muse about;
what good is their musing;
how muse they?"

Thereat neither the Dhamma-zealots nor the musers are pleased;
nor have they fared onwards
for the weal of many folk,
for their happiness,
their good,
nor for the weal and happiness
of devas and men.

▪

And there are some monks, musers,
who blame Dhamma-zealots,
saying:

"These fellows say:

'We are Dhamma-zealots, we are Dhamma-zealots!'

They are puffed up,
proud,
excitable fellows,
mouthy speechifiers,
forgetful of mindfulness,
lacking self-possession
and composure,
with their thoughts a-wander and their sense-governance rude.[6]

And what is their Dhamma zeal;
what good is their Dhamma zeal;
how are they zealous in Dhamma?"

There, too, neither the musers nor the Dhamma-zealots are pleased;
nor have they fared onwards
for the weal of many folk,
for their happiness,
their good,
nor for the weal and happiness
of devas and men.

▪

And there are some Dhamma-zealots who just praise Dhamma-zealots;
who praise not musers.

There, too, neither Dhamma-zealots nor musers are pleased;
nor have they fared onwards
for the weal of many folk,
for their happiness,
their good,
nor for the weal and happiness
of devas and men.

▪

And there are some musers who just praise musers;
who praise not Dhamma-zealots.

There, too, neither musers nor Dhamma-zealots are pleased;
nor have they fared [253] onwards
for the weal of many folk,
for their happiness,
their good,

nor for the weal and happiness
of devas and men.

§

Wherefore, sirs, you should train yourselves thus:

"Being Dhamma-zealots,
we will praise musers.

Thus should you train yourselves, reverend sirs.

And why?

Verily, sirs, these wondrous persons are hardly found in the world - they who live
with their whole being in tune with the deathless.[7]

▪

And you should train yourselves thus, reverend sirs:

Being musers,
we will praise Dhamma-zealots.

Thus should you train yourselves, reverend sirs.

And why?

Verily, sirs, these wondrous persons
are hardly found in the world - they who with insight

penetrate and see the deep way of the goal'[8]

---

[1] Sāriputta's younger brother; see Brethr. 119; above IV, § 17.

[2] Buddh. India, 26. Pronounced Che-ti (Chay-tee).

[3] Comy. simply nigame; it was on the Ganges and was where Revata met the elders concerning the ten Vajjian heresies, Vin ii, 300 (Vin. Texts, iii, 396); Mvaṅsa trsl. 22; C.H.I. i, 214. Cf. A. v, 41 for another talk by Maha Cunda there.

[4] Dhamma-yogā bhikkhū.

[5] Jhāyanti pajjhāyanti. Comy. Upasagga-vasena vaḍḍhitāni.

[6] Pākaṭ'indriyā.

[7] Ye amataṃ dhātuṃ kāyena phusitva viharanti. Lit. 'live having touched with the body (or by act) the deathless conditions.'

[8] Ye gambhiraṃ attha-padaṃ paññāya ativijjha passanti. Cf. A. iv, 362. Comy. of course explains: Gūḷhaṃ paṭicchannaṃ khandha-dhātu-āyatanādi-atthaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Paṭhama Sandiṭṭhika Suttaṃ

Sutta 47

For This Life (a)

---

[253]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now Sīvaka of the Top-knot,[1] a wanderer,
visited the Exalted One,
greeted him
and, after exchanging the usual compliments,
sat down at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted One:

'They say, sir,[2]

"Dhamma's for this life,[3] Dhamma's for this life!"

But how, sir, is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,[4]

bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise by its relation to self?'[5]

'Come, Sīvaka,
I will just question you in turn about this;
answer as you please.

▪

Now what think you, Sīvaka, suppose there's greed here in the self,[6]
would you know:

"There's greed here in myself" -

or suppose there's no greed,
would you know:

"There is no greed here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's greed here in myself"
when you know
"There is no greed here in myself"
thus is [254] Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, Sīvaka,
suppose there's hatred here in the self,
would you know:

"There's hatred here in myself" -

or suppose there's no hatred,
would you know:

"There is no hatred here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's hatred here in myself"
when you know
"There is no hatred here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, Sīvaka,
suppose there's infatuation here in the self,
would you know:

"There's infatuation here in myself" -

or suppose there's no infatuation,
would you know:

"There is no infatuation here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's infatuation here in myself"
when you know
"There is no infatuation here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

§

Now what think you, Sīvaka, suppose there's some hold[7] greed has here in the self,
would you know:

"There's some hold greed has here in myself" -

or suppose there's no hold greed has,
would you know:

"There is no hold greed has here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's some hold greed has here in myself"
when you know
"There is no hold greed has here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,

for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, Sīvaka,
suppose there's some hold hatred has here in the self,
would you know:

"There's some hold hatred has here in myself" -

or suppose there's no hold hatred has,
would you know:

"There is no hold hatred has here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's some hold hatred has here in myself"
when you know
"There is no hold hatred has here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, Sīvaka,
suppose there's some hold infatuation has here in the self,
would you know:

"There's some hold infatuation has here in myself" -

or suppose there's no hold infatuation has,
would you know:

"There is no hold infatuation has here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's some hold infatuation has here in myself"
when you know
"There is no hold infatuation has here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

'This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma
has been blazed abroad by Master Gotama
in manifold ways.

'I, Master Gotama,
go to Master Gotama for refuge,

to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;
let Master Gotama look upon me as a lay-disciple,
to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

---

[1] Moliya-sīvaka; cf. S. iv, 230.

[2] Bhante.

[3] Saṃ- (sa- or sayan ?) diṭṭhi-ka. Cf. above VI, §10.

[4] Akāliko, not of earthly time-measure.

[5] Pacc-attaṃ.

[6] Ajjh-attaṃ. Comy. Niyakajjhatte.

[7] -dhammaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Dutiya Sandiṭṭhika Suttaṃ

Sutta 48

For This Life (b)

---

[254]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

A brāhman,
approached the Exalted One,
greeted him
and, after exchanging the usual compliments,
sat down at one side.

So seated, he said to the Exalted One:

'They say, sir,

"Dhamma's for this life,
Dhamma's for this life!"

But how, sir, is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"

leading onwards,
knowable to the wise by its relation to self?'

'Come, brāhman,
I will just question you in turn about this;
answer as you please.

▪

Now what think you, brāhman,
suppose there's passion here in the self,
would you know:

"There's passion here in myself" -

or suppose there's no passion,
would you know:

"There is no passion here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's passion here in myself"
when you know
"There is no passion here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, brāhman,
suppose there's hatred here in the self,

would you know:

"There's hatred here in myself" -

or suppose there's no hatred,
would you know:

"There is no hatred here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's hatred here in myself"
when you know
"There is no hatred here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, brāhman,
suppose there's infatuation here in the self,
would you know:

"There's infatuation here in myself" -

or suppose there's no infatuation,
would you know:

"There is no infatuation here in myself"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's infatuation here in myself"
when you know
"There is no infatuation here in myself"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

§

Now what think you, brāhman,
suppose there's self-defilement in deed,
would you know:

"There's self-defilement in deed" - or suppose there's no self-defilement in deed,

would you know:

"There is no self-defilement in deed"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's some self-defilement in deed"
when you know
"There is no self-defilement in deed"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"

leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, brāhman,
suppose there's self-defilement in word,
would you know:

"There's self-defilement in word" - or suppose there's no self-defilement in word,

would you know:

"There is no self-defilement in word"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's some self-defilement in word"
when you know
"There is no self-defilement in word"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

Now what think you, brāhman,
suppose there's self-defilement in thought,
would you know:

"There's self-defilement in thought" - or suppose there's no self-defilement in thought,

would you know:

"There is no self-defilement in thought"?'

'Surely, sir.'

'Well, when you know
"There's some self-defilement in thought"
when you know
"There is no self-defilement in thought"
thus is Dhamma for this life,
for other worlds,
bidding "Come see,"
leading onwards,
knowable to the wise
by its relation to self.

▪

'This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma
has been blazed abroad by Master Gotama
in manifold ways.

'I, Master Gotama,
go to Master Gotama for refuge,
to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;

let Master Gotama look upon me as a lay-disciple,
to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Khema Suttaṃ

Sutta 49

Khema

---

[254]

Thus have I heard:

Once when the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park
the venerable Khema[1] [255] and the venerable Sumana dwelt in Andha[2] Grove, near Sāvatthī.

And they went and visited the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down at one side.

So seated, the venerable Khema said to him:

'Lord, whatsoever monk is arahant,
has destroyed the cankers,
lived the life,
done what ought to be done,
set down the burden,
found the highest goal,[3]

destroyed becoming's bonds,
and is in high gnosis released,
to him there comes no thought:

"There is one better than I,"[4]

nor

"There is one equal,"

nor

"There is one worse."'

Thus spoke the venerable Khema
and the Master approved;
and seeing that,
the venerable Khema got up,
saluted the Exalted One
and took his departure, passing him by on the right.

■

Now, not long after he had gone, the venerable Sumana said this to the Exalted One:

'Lord, whatsoever monk is arahant,
has destroyed the cankers,
lived the life,
done what ought to be done,
set down the burden,
found the highest goal,
destroyed becoming's bonds,
and is in high gnosis released,
to him there comes no thought:

"There is none better than I,"

nor

"There is none equal,"

nor

"There is none worse."'

Thus spoke the venerable Sumana
and the Master approved;
and seeing that,
the venerable Sumana got up,
saluted,
and took his departure,
passing by on the right.

§

And shortly after they had gone,
the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

'Thus, monks, do clansmen declare gnosis;
the goal is told,
but self is not mentioned.

Yet there are some foolish fellows here who declare gnosis braggingly, it seems.

Afterwards they suffer remorse.[5]

[256] None greater, less, the same![6] - these sway them not:
Lived is the godly life, ended the being born,[7]
And from all bonds released, they journey on.

---

[1] Khema does not seem to be mentioned elsewhere and the Comy. is silent; two Sumanas are mentioned in Thag. [ed.: Sumano and Sumano 2] Cf. K.S. iii, 107, 'Khemaka.'

[2] K.S. trsl. 'Dark Wood,' see note at i, 160 and more particularly Watters' Chwang, i, 397-308; Beal's 'Records,' ii, 13.

[3] Anu-p-patta-sa-d-attho. Cf. D. iii, 83; M. i, 4; S. i, 71.

[4] Atthi me seyyo; cf. Brethr. 366; Dhs. § 1116. Comy. calls these mānā, conceits.

[5] This para, recurs at Vin. i, 185; cf. A. i, 218; G.S. i, 198 n. There is a play on the words in the text, attho and attā. Cf. also Mrs. Rhys Davids' Buddhhism, 216; cf. Milinda, 396.

[6] Cf. Sn. 954.

[7] Sañ-jāti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Indriya Saṅvara Suttaṃ

Sutta 50

The Senses

---

[256]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks,[1] when sense-control is not,
virtue perforce[2] is destroyed
in him who has fallen[3] away
from sense-control;

when virtue is not,
right concentration is perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from virtue;

when concentration is not,
true knowledge and insight are perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from concentration;

when true knowledge and insight are not,
aversion and dispassion are perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from knowledge and insight;

when aversion and dispassion are not,
emancipated knowledge and insight are perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from aversion and dispassion.

▪

Monks, imagine a tree
with branches and leaves fallen away:

Its buds come not to maturity,
nor its bark,
sapwood

▪

Even so, monks,
when the sense-control is not,
virtue perforce is destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from sense-control;

when virtue is not,
right concentration is perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from virtue;

when concentration is not,
true knowledge and insight are perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from concentration;

when true knowledge and insight are not,
aversion and dispassion are perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from knowledge and insight;

when aversion and dispassion are not,
emancipated knowledge and insight are perforce destroyed
in him who has fallen away
from aversion and dispassion.

§

Monks, when there is sense-control, virtue perforce thrives[4]
in him thriving in sense-control;

when there is virtue,
concentration perforce thrives
in him thriving in virtue;

when there is concentration,
true knowledge and insight perforce thrives
in him thriving in concentration;

when there is true knowledge and insight,
aversion and dispassion perforce thrives
in him thriving in true knowledge and insight;

when there is aversion and dispassion,
emancipated knowledge and insight perforce thrives
in him thriving in aversion and dispassion.

▪

Monks, imagine a tree
with thriving branches and leaves:

Its buds,
bark,
sapwood
and heart
come to maturity.

▪

Even so, monks, when there is sense-control, virtue perforce thrives in him thriving in sense-control;

when there is virtue,
concentration perforce thrives
in him thriving in virtue;

when there is concentration,
true knowledge and insight perforce thrives
in him thriving in concentration;

when there is true knowledge and insight,
aversion and dispassion perforce thrives
in him thriving in true knowledge and insight;

when there is aversion and dispassion,
emancipated knowledge and insight perforce thrives
in him thriving in aversion and dispassion.

[1] See above V, § 24 and references there.

[2] Hat'upanisaṃ. Comy. -upanissayarjṃ On A. iv, 99: chinna-paceayo.

[3] Vi-panna, from √pad, to fall.

[4] Sampanna.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Ānanda Suttaṃ

Sutta 51

Ānanda

---

[256]

Thus have I heard:

Once the venerable Ānanda and the venerable Sāriputta were dwelling near Sāvatthī.

Now the venerable Ānanda visited the venerable Sāriputta greeted him
and, after exchanging the usual polite talk,
sat down at one side.

So seated, the venerable Ānanda said this
to the venerable Sāriputta:

[257] 'How, reverend Sāriputta, may a monk learn new[1] doctrine
and doctrines learnt remain unconfused,
and old doctrines,
to which erstwhile he was mentally attuned,[2]
remain in use
and he get to know something not known?

■

'The venerable Ānanda is very learned;[3] let the venerable one illuminate[4] this.'

'Well then, reverend Sāriputta,
listen,
pay good heed
and I will speak."

'Yes, sir,' he rejoined;
and the venerable Ānanda said:

'Consider, reverend Sāriputta, a monk who masters Dhamma:[5]
the sayings, psalms, catechisms, songs, solemnities, speeches, birth stories, marvels and runes -
as learnt,
as mastered,
he teaches others Dhamma in detail;
as learnt,
as mastered,
he makes others say it in detail;
as learnt,
as mastered,
he makes others repeat it in detail;
as learnt,
as mastered,
he ever reflects,
ever ponders over it in his heart, mindfully he pores on it.

▪

Where soever abide elders, learned[6] in traditional lore, Dhamma-minders,
discipline-minders,

epitomists,
there he spends Was;[7]
and visiting them from time to time, questions and inquires of them:

"This talk, sir,
what, verily, is its aim?"[8] -

and their reverences disclose the undisclosed, make, as it were, a causeway[9]
where there is none,
drive away doubt
concerning many perplexing things.

▪

In this Way, reverend Sāriputta, a monk may learn new doctrine,
and doctrines learnt remain unconfused,
old doctrines,
to which erstwhile he was mentally attuned,
remain in use
and he gets to know something not known.'

▪

[258] 'Excellent,
amazing,
reverend sir,
is all this that has been so well said by the venerable Ānanda;
and we will mind
that the venerable one is endowed with these six things:

The venerable Ānanda masters Dhamma:
the sayings, psalms and the rest;

the venerable Ānanda teaches others Dhamma in detail,
as learnt,
as mastered;
the venerable Ānanda makes others say it;
the venerable Ānanda makes others repeat it;
the venerable Ānanda reflects, ponders,
pores on it;
wheresoever learned elders abide,
there the venerable Ānanda spends Was,
and he questions them:

"This talk, sir,
what is its aim?'[10] -
and they disclose the undisclosed,
make a causeway where there is none,
drive away doubt
concerning many perplexing things.'

---

[1] A-s-suta, not heard.

[2] Cetasā samphuṭṭha-pubbā. Comy. cittena phusita-pubbā.

[3] Lit. 'has heard much.'

[4] Cf. above V, § 170,

[5] Cf. V, §73.

[6] Āgatāgamā dhamma-dharā vinaya-dharā mātikā-dharā; cf. A. i, 117. On the last Comy. observes: dve pātimokkha-dharā.

[7] Vassam upeti, that is the rainy season, Lent; this lasts four months, June to October, and monks then may not travel; thus it is a Retreat, but I borrow the short Sinhalese word.

[8] Or 'meaning.'

[9] An-uttānī-kataṃ uttānī-karonti, from √tan and √kr.

[10] Or 'meaning.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Khattiya Suttaṃ

Sutta 52

The Noble

---

[258]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Now brahman Jānussoṇi[1] approached the Exalted One,
greeted him
and, after exchanging the usual polite talk,
sat down at one side.

So seated, he said:

'Master Gotama,
what's a noble's aim,[2]
what's his quest,
what's his resolve,
what's his want,
what's his ideal?'

'Brāhman,
wealth's a noble's aim,

wisdom's his quest,
power's his resolve,
the earth's his want,
dominion's his ideal.'

▪

'And a brahman, Master Gotama, what's his aim
what's his quest,
what's his resolve,
what's his want,
what's his ideal?'

'Wealth's his aim,
wisdom's his quest,
mantras are his resolve,
sacrifices his want,
Brahma-world is his ideal.'

▪

'And a householder, Master Gotama
what's his aim
what's his quest,
what's his resolve,
what's his want,
what's his ideal?'

'Wealth's his aim,
wisdom's his quest,
craft's his resolve,
work's his want,
work's end is his ideal.'

▪

'And a woman, Master Gotama what's her aim
what's her quest,
what's her resolve,
what's her want,
what's her ideal?'

'Man's her aim,
adornment's her quest,
a son's her resolve,
to be without[3] a rival is her want, dominion's her ideal.'

▪

[259] 'And a thief, Master Gotama
what's his aim
what's his quest,
what's his resolve,
what's his want,
what's his ideal?'

'Booty's his aim,
capture's his quest,
a caravan's his resolve,
darkness is his want,
not to be seen is his ideal.'

▪

'And a recluse, Master Gotama
what's his aim
what's his quest,
what's his resolve,
what's his want,
what's his ideal?'

'Patience and forbearance are his aim,
wisdom's his quest,
virtue's his resolve,
nothing's[4] his want,
Nibbāna's his ideal.'

▪

'Wonderful, wonderful, Master Gotama!

Verily, Master Gotama knows the aim, quest,
resolve,
want
and ideal of nobles
brahmans,
householders,
women,
thieves
and recluses!

▪

'This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma
has been blazed abroad by Master Gotama
in manifold ways.

'I, Master Gotama,
go to Master Gotama for help,
to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;
let Master Gotama look upon me as a lay-disciple,
to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

---

[1] He lived at Manasākaṭa in Kosala; see D. i, 235; M. i, 16; A. i, 66; S. ii, 76, etc.

[2] Adhippāya, upavicāra, adhiṭṭhāna, abhinivesa, (Comy. and v.l. also vinivesa), pariyosāna.

[3] A-sapati-. Comy. with v.l. sapatti-, but S.e. -sapati-. Comy. observes; she thinks Asapattī hutvā ekikā'va ghare vaseyyan- ti

[4] We should read *akiñcaññ*a with Comy. and S.e. for a- in text.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Appamāda Suttaṃ

Sutta 53

Earnestness[1]

---

[259]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

Then another brāhman visited the Exalted One,
greeted him,
exchanged compliments
and sat down at one side.

So seated, he said:

'Master Gotama, is there one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter?

▪

'There is, brāhman one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.'

▪

'What, Master Gotama is that one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter?

▪

'Verily, earnestness, brāhman,
is the one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.

§

Brāhman, as the footmarks[2] of all prowling[3] creatures are admitted in an elephant's and the elephant's foot[4]
is counted chief;
so earnestness, brāhman

is the one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.

▪

[260] As[5] all rafters in a peaked house reach to the peak,
slope to the peak,
unite in the peak,
and the peak is counted chief;
so earnestness, brāhman;
is the one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.

▪

As a grass-cutter,
on cutting grass,[6]
grasps it at the top
and shakes it to and fro and beats[7] it about;
so earnestness, brāhman;
is the one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.

▪

As[8] in cutting mango fruit by the stalk, all the mangoes clustering thereon
come away with the stalk;
so earnestness, brāhman;
is the one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.

▪

As[9] every petty rajah becomes a follower of the Wheel-turning rajah and the Wheel-turner is counted chief;
so earnestness, brāhman;
is the one thing
which, when made become,
made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.

▪

As[10] the light of the stars is not worth a sixteenth part the light of the moon
and the light of the moon
is counted chief;
so earnestness, brāhman;
is the one thing
which, when made become,

made to increase,
embraces and establishes two weals:
weal here
and weal hereafter.'

§

'This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

This, indeed, is wonderful, Master Gotama!

'Tis just as if one had set upright a thing toppled over,
opened out a covered thing,
showed a blind man along the road,
brought an oil lamp into the dark,
so that those that had eyes could see objects —
it is just thus that Dhamma
has been blazed abroad by Master Gotama
in manifold ways.

'I, Master Gotama,
go to Master Gotama for help,
to Dhamma
and to the monk-Order;
let Master Gotama look upon me as a lay-disciple,
to that refuge gone,
henceforth as long as life lasts!'

---

[1] Appamāda (Appamādena sampādetha' — ayaṃ Tathāgatassa pacchimā vācā); see K.S. i, 111 n. on this word; as eko dhammo, the one thing, cf. D.

iii, 272 and ref. there; It. 16. There are six similes, hence this sutta's inclusion.

[2] Pada-jātāni, either 'characteristics' or 'footprints'; cf. K.S. and F. Dial, i, 133, also A. v, 21.

[3] Jaṅgama; see K.S. v, 34 n. from √gam, with intensive ja; cf.jagat.

[4] S.e. with our text omits 'in size,' other texts include.

[5] Cf. V, § 12; S. iii, 156; v, 43; A. v, 21.

[6] Babbaja, balbaja: eleusine indica (Mcd's Skt. Dict.), K.S. iii, 132.

[7] S.e. and Comy. nicchedeti; the latter gives the variant nipphoṭeti, observing: he beats it on his arm or on a tree.

[8] D. i 46; iii, 156; cf. Vism. 356; DA. i, 128.

[9] S. v, 44; A. v, 22; cf. M. iii, 173.

[10] It. 19; cf. A. iv, 151; J. v, 63.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
V. Dhammika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter V: Dhammika

Dhammika Suttaṃ

Sutta 54

Dhammika[1]

---

[260]

Thus have I heard:

Once, while the Exalted One was dwelling on Mount Vulture Peak near Rājagaha, the venerable Dhammika was a lodger in his native district.[2]

And there were there altogether seven settlements.[3]

Now the venerable Dhammika went about insulting the monks who visited,
reviling them,
annoying them,
nudging them,
vexing them with talk;
and they,
insulted,
reviled,
annoyed,
nudged,
vexed with talk;
departed,

nor settled there,
but quitted the lodging.

And the local[2] lay-disciples thought to themselves:

"We're [261] ready enough
with the requisites -
robe,
alms,
lodging,
medicaments -
for the Order;
yet visiting monks depart,
nor settle here,
but quit the lodging.

What's the cause and reason for this?"

And they thought:

"It's the venerable Dhammika!

He insults the monks,
reviles them
annoys them,
nudges them,
and vexes them with talk.

Suppose we send him forth."

So they went to the venerable Dhammika
and said to him:

"Sir, let the venerable Dhammika depart,
long enough has he lodged here!"

And the venerable Dhammika left that lodging for another.

▪

There, too, the venerable Dhammika went about insulting the monks who visited,
reviling them,
annoying them,
nudging them,
vexing them with talk;
and they,
insulted,
reviled,
annoyed,
nudged,
vexed with talk;
departed,
nor settled there,
but quitted the lodging.

And the local lay-disciples thought to themselves:

"We're ready enough
with the requisites -
robe,
alms,
lodging,
medicaments -
for the Order;
yet visiting monks depart,
nor settle here,
but quit the lodging.

What's the cause and reason for this?"

And they thought:

"It's the venerable Dhammika!

He insults the monks,
reviles them
annoys them,
nudges them,
and vexes them with talk.

Suppose we send him forth."

So they went to the venerable Dhammika
and said to him:

"Sir, let the venerable Dhammika depart,
long enough has he lodged here!"

And the venerable Dhammika left that lodging
for another.

▪

There, too, the venerable Dhammika went about insulting the monks who visited,
reviling them,
annoying them,
nudging them,
vexing them with talk;
and they,
insulted,
reviled,
annoyed,
nudged,
vexed with talk;
departed,
nor settled there,
but quitted the lodging.

And the local lay-disciples thought to themselves:

"We're ready enough
with the requisites -
robe,
alms,
lodging,
medicaments -
for the Order;
yet visiting monks depart,
nor settle here,
but quit the lodging.

What's the cause and reason for this?"

And they thought:

"It's the venerable Dhammika!

He insults the monks,
reviles them
annoys them,
nudges them,
and vexes them with talk.

Suppose we send him forth."

So they went to the venerable Dhammika
and said to him:

"Sir, let the venerable Dhammika leave all seven local lodgings!"

Then thought the venerable Dhammika:

"I am sent forth by the local lay-disciples from all seven lodgings of my birthplace;

where shall I go now?"

And he thought:

"What if I visit the Exalted One?"

So the venerable Dhammika, with robe and bowl,
departed for Rājagaha,
and in due time
came to Mount Vulture Peak
near Rājagaha;
and approaching the Exalted One,
saluted
and sat down at one side.

And the Exalted One said to him,
so seated:

"Well, brāhman Dhammika, whence come you?"

"Lord, I have been sent forth by the local lay-folk from the seven lodgings of my native district."

"Come now, brāhman Dhammika, what's that to you?

No matter where they have sent you forth[4] from,
you have gone forth[4]
thence to come to me!

In[5] times past, brāhman Dhammika, when seafaring [262] merchants put to sea in ships, they took with them
a bird to sight land.

When the ship was out of sight of land,
they freed the bird;
and it flew eastward
and westward,
northward
and southward, upward
and around.

And if the bird sighted land near by,[6]
it was gone for good;[7]
but if the bird saw no land, it returned to the ship.

Even so, brāhman Dhammika,
no matter where they have sent you forth from,
you have gone forth
thence to come to me.

Long ago, brāhman Dhammika, rajah Koravya[8] had a king-banyan tree called Steadfast,[9] and the shade of its widespread[10] branches was cool and lovely.

Its shelter broadened to twelve leagues, its roots spread to five and the great fruit thereof was in keeping - as big as pipkins[11]
was the sweet fruit,
clear and as sweet as the honey of bees.[12]

And the rajah and his concubines enjoyed one portion of Steadfast,
the army another;
the town and Country folk enjoyed one portion,

recluses and godly men
one portion,
and one portion
the beasts and birds enjoyed.

None guarded its fruit and none hurt another
for its fruit.

Now there came a man
who ate his fill of fruit, broke a branch
and Went his way.

Thought the deva dwelling in Steadfast:

'How amazing,
how astonishing it is,
that a man should be so evil
as to break a branch off Steadfast, after eating his fill!

Suppose Steadfast
were to bear no more fruit!'

And Steadfast bore no more fruit.

Then, brāhman Dhammika, rajah Koravya visited Sakka,
king of devas,
and said:

'Pray, your grace,
know you that Steadfast,
the king-banyan tree,
bears no fruit?'

[263] And Sakka, the deva-king, worked a work of mystic power
so that there came a mighty wind and rain which smote Steadfast and overturned him.

And the deva dwelling there was full of grief and despair and stood beside Steadfast, weeping and lamenting.

Then brāhman Dhammika,
the deva-king, Sakka,
approached the deva of the banyan tree
and said:

'What ails thee, deva?'

'Your grace, a mighty squall has come and overturned my home.'[13]

'Came that squall, deva, whilst thou[14] keptest tree-Dhamma?'

'But how, your grace, keeps a tree
tree-Dhamma?'

'Just thus, deva:

The grubber takes the roots,
the stripper the bark,
the plucker the leaves,
the picker the fruit,
nor therefore is there any cause for the deva to mope and pine - thus keeps a tree tree-Dhamma.'

'Your grace, I was not keeping tree-Dhamma, when the squall came and smote and overturned my home.'

'Yet, deva,
should thou keep tree-Dhamma,
thy home would be as of yore.'

'Then I will keep tree-Dhamma, your grace;
let my home be as of yore!'

And, brāhman Dhammika,
the deva-king, Sakka,
worked a work of mystic power
and there came a mighty wind and rain which set up Steadfast,
the king-banyan tree,
and healed[15] his roots.

Did you, even so, brāhman Dhammika, keep recluse-Dhamma,
when the local lay-folk sent you forth from each of the seven lodgings of your birthplace?"

"But how, lord, keeps a recluse recluse-Dhamma?"

"Thuswise, brāhman Dhammika:

A recluse returns not [264] the insult of the insulter, the anger of the angry,
the abuse of the abuser[16] -

thus keeps a recluse
recluse-Dhamma."

"Too true, lord,
I kept not recluse-Dhamma
when the local lay-folk sent me forth from the seven lodgings."

"Long[17] ago, brāhman Dhammika,
there was a teacher named Bright-Eyes,[18]
a course-setter,
freed of lust's passions.

And to Bright-Eyes brāhman Dhammika,
there came many hundreds of disciples;
and he taught them Dhamma
to win fellowship in Brahmā's world.

Now those whose hearts
gladdened not at the teaching,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
came to the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
but those whose hearts
gladdened at the teaching,
after death,
came to the happy heaven-world.

■

"Long ago, brāhman Dhammika,
there was a teacher named Maimed-Mute[19]
a course-setter,
freed of lust's passions.

And to Maimed-Mute brāhman Dhammika,
there came many hundreds of disciples;
and he taught them Dhamma
to win fellowship in Brahmā's world.

Now those whose hearts
gladdened not at the teaching,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
came to the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
but those whose hearts
gladdened at the teaching,
after death,
came to the happy heaven-world.

▪

"Long ago, brāhman Dhammika,
there was a teacher named Spoke-Rim[20]
a course-setter,
freed of lust's passions.

And to Spoke-Rim brāhman Dhammika,
there came many hundreds of disciples;
and he taught them Dhamma
to win fellowship in Brahmā's world.

Now those whose hearts
gladdened not at the teaching,

on the breaking up of the body after death,
came to the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
but those whose hearts
gladdened at the teaching,
after death,
came to the happy heaven-world.

▪

"Long ago, brāhman Dhammika,
there was a teacher named Tillei[21]
a course-setter,
freed of lust's passions.

And to Tillei brāhman Dhammika,
there came many hundreds of disciples;
and he taught them Dhamma
to win fellowship in Brahmā's world.

Now those whose hearts
gladdened not at the teaching,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
came to the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
but those whose hearts
gladdened at the teaching,
after death,
came to the happy heaven-world.

▪

"Long ago, brāhman Dhammika,
there was a teacher named Mahout[22]
a course-setter,
freed of lust's passions.

And to Mahout brāhman Dhammika,
there came many hundreds of disciples;
and he taught them Dhamma
to win fellowship in Brahmā's world.

Now those whose hearts
gladdened not at the teaching,
on the breaking up of the body after death,
came to the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
but those whose hearts
gladdened at the teaching,
after death,
came to the happy heaven-world.

▪

"Long ago, brāhman Dhammika,
there was a teacher named Light-Ward,[23]
a course-setter,[24]
freed of lust's passions.

And to Light-Ward brāhman Dhammika,
there came many hundreds of disciples;
and he taught them Dhamma
to win fellowship in Brahmā's world.

Now those whose hearts
gladdened not at the teaching,

on the breaking up of the body after death,
came to the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
but those whose hearts
gladdened at the teaching,
after death,
came to the happy heaven-world.

▪

Now what think you, brāhman Dhammika, would a man beget great demerit,
were he,
with ill wit,
to insult,
revile
these six teachers,
course-setters,
freed of lust's passions,
or the many hundreds of the disciples
of their orders?"

"Surely, lord."

"Indeed, brāhman Dhammika,
a man would beget great demerit,
were he,
with ill wit,
to insult,
revile
these six teachers,
course-setters,
freed of lust's passions,
or the many hundreds of the disciples

of their orders;
but he would beget greater demerit
were he,
with ill wit,
to insult,
revile a person with vision.[25]

And why?

I declare, brāhman,
that in the reviling of outsiders there is not so great a pit[26] [265] dug for oneself as in the reviling
of one's fellows in the godly life.

Wherefore, brāhman Dhammika, train thus:

'We will think no ill of our fellows in the godly life.'

Verily, brāhman Dhammika, you should train yourself thus.

Brāhmans were Bright-Eyes, Maimed-Mute and Spoke-Rim,
A teacher Tiller and a prince[27] Mahout,
And Light-Ward, lord of bulls,[28] the seven's house-priest:
Six past-famed teachers who in harmlessness,
Not foetidness,[29] by pity freed,[30] lust's bonds
Overcame, lust's passions purged, Brahma's world won.
So too their many hundred followers
Unfoetid and by pity freed, lust's bonds
Overcame, lust's passions purged, Brahma's world won.
Who with ill-fashioned wit reviles them,
Sages of other sects, lust-freed, composed -
That man shall great demerit thus beget:
But who with ill-fashioned wit reviles him,
The view-won monk - disciple of the Awake -

That man by that demerit greater makes.
[266] Vex[31] not the righteous, rid of groundless views,[32]
"Best man o'th'Ariyan Order" him they Call; Nor where lust's passions are but wholly stilled;[33] Nor where the senses' edge is blunt;[34] nor where Faith, mindfulness, zest, calm and insight sway:
Who vexes such, firstly is hurt himself;
Who hurts himself, thereafter harms another:
But who wards self, his outward[35] too is warded.
Hence ward thyself, digging no pit,[36] e'er wise.'

---

[1] He is no doubt the Dhammika of Thag. 303-306; Brethr. 185. Dhammapāla seems to have known our story but forgotten the details; he uses 'gāmakāvāsa' for our 'jāti-bhūmi.' He refers to the 'rukkha-dhamma-jātaka., See below. Vism. 442 refers to a lay-disciple called Dhammika.

[2] Jāti-bhūmi and -bhūmika; cf. M. i, 145. Comy. is silent here, but on M. 'jāta-ṭṭhāna,' observing that Kapilavatthu was the B,'s 'jāti-bhūmi.'

[3] Precursors of the monastery.

[4] Pabbājenti and pabbājito; there is a word-play; the latter means, also, gone forth into the Order, made a monk, ordained.

[5] This recurs at D. i, 222; cf. J. iii, 120, 267. Comy. says the bird was a 'quarter' crow. In the (possibly allied) story of Noah sending out birds from the ark, the raven did not return though it sighted no land. A-tīra-dassin was used of the untaught man folk, 'one who has not sighted the beyond'; K.S. iii, 140 (S. iii, 164). (J. iii, 267 at DA. ii, 657 is called Dhammika-vāyasa-jātaka.)

[6] Text samantā, but Comy. as well sāmantā.

[7] Tathāgatako.

[8] This may be the half-mythical Pañchāla king, Kraivya, C.H.I. i, 121.

[9] Suppatiṭṭha, S.e. so. Suppatiṭṭha was a shrine near Rājagaha, Vin. i, 38.

[10] Pañca-sākha; see Mcd. Skt. Dict. s.v. √pañc.

[11] Āḷhaka-thālikā. Comy. taṇḍulāḷhakassa bhattapacanathālikā.

[12] Khuddaṃ madhuṃ. Comy. khudda-makkhikāhi kataṃ daṇḍaka-madhuṃ.

[13] Bhavanaṃ, haunt.

[14] Api nu tvaṃ ... ṭhitayā; so also S.e. Comy. explains: apt nu tava, and we should perhaps read tavaṃ.

[15] Sacchavīni. Comy. samāna-cchavīni; the Burmese v.l. sañchavīni; cf. M. ii, 216, 259.

[16] Cf. A. ii, 215. Comy. and S.e. read, rightly, rosentaṃ.

[17] All this recurs at A. iv, 135; cf. also 103. The Dhamma taught is that of the Bodhisat, the Amity-Dhamma; see J. ii, 60; iv, 490; this is Brahmavihāra doctrine, Exp. 257 ff. Probably the six sages are rebirths of the Bodhisat. Comy. is silent.

[18] Sunetta, so Comy.; J. i, 35, 39.

[19] Mūgapakkha, J. i, 46; iv, 1; Cariyāpit., p. 96.

[20] Aranemi; refs, are lacking.

[21] Kuddālaka, J. i, 46.

[22] Hatthipāla, J. i, 45; iv, 473 ff.

[23] Jotipāla, D. ii, 230 ff.; J. i, 43; iii, 463.

[24] Tittha-kara.

[25] Diṭṭhi-sampanna. Comy. sotāpanna.

[26] Evarupiṃ khantiṃ. Comy. attano guṇa-khaṇanar)ṃ; possibly the reading is incorrect, but S.e. and our texts so. That Comy. gives the right meaning is confirmed by akkhato; guṇa-khanaṇena (Comy.) in the last line of the gāthā.

[27] Māṇavo; the Jātakas call him Kumāra.

[28] Govinda, Dial. ii, 266: 'Steward'; he was the chaplain, purohita, to rajah Reṇu and his six friends with whom he (Reṇu) shared his kingdom; our Comy. refers to this story.

[29] Nir-āma-gandha. Comy. kodhāma-gandha. However, even Light-Ward in the Digha story did not understand this word when used by Brahma, the Eternal Youth! I quote the Rhys Davids translation:

(What meant thou by "foul odours among men,"
O Brahmā? Here I understand thee not.
Tell what these signify, who knows all. ...'
Anger and lies, deceit and treachery,
Selfishness, self-conceit and jealousy,
Greed, doubt, and lifting hands against fellow-men, Lusting and hate, dullness and pride of life, -
When yoked with these man is of odour foul, Hell-doomed, and shut out from the heaven of Brāhm.'

[30] Karuṇe vimuttā. Comy. karuna-jjhāna vimuttā; this is the second brahma-vihāra, godly state.

[31] Na sādhu-rūpaṃ āsīde. P.E.D. suggests na should be omitted, but see s.v. āsajja; the meaning of āsīde here is the same as at A. iii, 69.

[32] Diṭṭhi-ṭṭhāna- (Comy. says 'the 62,' D. i, 1 ff.). The arahant is referred to.

[33] The Non-returner is referred to.

[34] Cf. A. ii, 151; the Once-returner is referred to.

[35] Tassa bāhiro.

[36] Ahkhato. Comy. guṇa-khaṇanena.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 55

Soṇa Suttaṃ

Sona

---

[266]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One was dwelling near Rājagaha,, on Mount Vulture Peak,
the venerable Sona[1] dwelt on Cool Wood[2]
near Rājagaha.

Now the venerable Sona,
in solitude apart,
communed thus in his heart:

'The Exalted one's disciples live in active energy
and I am one of them;
yet my heart is not detached
and free of the cankers.

My family is rich
and I can enjoy riches and do good;
what if I were to forsake the training
and turn to low things, enjoy riches and do good!'

▪

And the Exalted One,
knowing in his own heart
the venerable Sona's thoughts
— as a strong man might stretch his bent arm or bend his stretched arm — left Mount Vulture Peak and appeared in Cool Wood before the venerable Sona.

And when [267] his seat was ready,
the Exalted One sat down;
and the venerable Sona,
after saluting,
also sat down — at one side.

And the Exalted One said to him, so seated:

'Sona, did you not thus commune in your heart:

"The Exalted one's disciples live in active energy
and I am one of them;
yet my heart is not detached
and free of the cankers.

My family is rich
and I can enjoy riches and do good;
what if I were to forsake the training
and turn to low things,
enjoy riches and do good!"

'Yes, lord.'

▪

'Bethink you, Sona,
were you not, in the old days at home, clever at the lute's stringed music?'[3]

'Yes, lord.'

▪

'And bethink you, Sona,
when your lute's strings were over-strung,
was your lute then tuneful and playable?'

'No, indeed, lord.'

▪

'And bethink you, Sona,
when your lute's strings were over-lax,
was your lute then tuneful and playable?'

'No, indeed, lord.'

▪

'But when, Sona,
your lute's strings were neither over-strung nor over-lax,
but keyed to the middle pitch,[4]
was your lute then tuneful and playable?'

'Surely, lord'

▪

'Even so, Sona,
energy, when over-strung,
ends in flurry,

when over-lax,
in idleness.

■

Wherefore, Sona,
stand fast in the mean[5] of energy;
pierce the mean (in the use) of the faculties;
and therein grasp the real worth.'[6]

[268] 'Yes, lord.'

And the Exalted One,
after charging the venerable Sona with this counsel
— as a strong man might bend his arm to and fro — left Cool Wood and appeared on Mount Vulture Peak.

§

And presently[7] the venerable Sona stood fast in the mean of energy;
pierced the mean in the faculties;
and grasped therein the mark;
and living alone, secluded,
earnest, ardent, resolute, entered and abode, not long after,
here amid things seen,
by his own power,
in the realization of that end above all
of the godly life,
for the sake of which
clansmen rightly go forth

from the home to the homeless life;
and he knew:

'Birth is ended,
the godly life lived,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of this.'

And the venerable Sona
was numbered among the arahants.

§

Then, having won to arahantship, the venerable Sona thought:

'Suppose I visit the Exalted One and declare gnosis[8] near him!'

And he went to the Exalted One, saluted him, and sat down at one side;
and so seated, he said:

'Lord, the arahant monk who has destroyed the cankers,
lived the life,
done what was to be done,
set down the burden,
won self-weal,
shattered life's fetter
and is freed by perfect gnosis[9] has applied himself to six things:
to dispassion,

detachment,
harmlessness,
destroying craving,
destroying grasping
and to non-delusion.

§

Perhaps, lord, some venerable person may think:

"Could it be that this venerable man
has applied himself to dispassion relying on mere faith alone?"

Let him not think so.

Lord, the canker-freed monk,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
who sees naught in himself to be done,
naught to be added to what has been done,[10]
— by the fact of being passionless,
has applied himself to dispassion
by destroying passion;
by the fact of being without hatred,
has applied himself to dispassion
by destroying hatred;
by the fact of [269] being without delusion,
has applied himself to dispassion
by destroying delusion.

■

Or he may think:

"Could it be that this venerable man has applied himself to detachment while hankering after gains, favours and flattery?"

Let him not think so.

Lord, the canker-freed monk,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
who sees naught in himself to be done,
naught to be added to what has been done,
— by the fact of being passionless,
has applied himself to dispassion
by destroying passion;
by the fact of being without hatred,
has applied himself to dispassion
by destroying hatred;
by the fact of has applied himself to dispassion
by destroying delusion.

▪

Or he may think:

"Could it be that this venerable man
has applied himself to harmlessness while backsliding from the true, holding rule and rite (as sufficient)?"

Let him not think so.

Lord, the canker-freed monk,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
who sees naught in himself to be done,
naught to be added to what has been done,

— by the fact of being passionless,
has applied himself to harmlessness
by destroying passion;
by the fact of being without hatred,
has applied himself to harmlessness
by destroying hatred;
by the fact of being without delusion,
has applied himself to harmlessness
by destroying delusion.

▪

Or he may think:

"Could it be that this venerable man has applied himself to destroying craving while backsliding from the true, holding rule and rite (as sufficient)?"

Let him not think so.

Lord, the canker-freed monk,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
who sees naught in himself to be done,
naught to be added to what has been done,
— by the fact of being passionless,
has applied himself to destroying craving
by destroying passion;
by the fact of being without hatred,
has applied himself to destroying craving
by destroying hatred;
by the fact of being without delusion,
has applied himself to destroying craving
by destroying delusion.

▪

Or he may think:

"Could it be that this venerable man has applied himself to destroying grasping while backsliding from the true, holding rule and rite (as sufficient)?"

Let him not think so.

Lord, the canker-freed monk,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
who sees naught in himself to be done,
naught to be added to what has been done,
— by the fact of being passionless,
has applied himself to destroying grasping
by destroying passion;
by the fact of being without hatred,
has applied himself to destroying grasping
by destroying hatred;
by the fact of being without delusion,
has applied himself to destroying grasping
by destroying delusion.

▪

Or he may think:

"Could it be that this venerable man has applied himself to non-delusion, while backsliding from the true, holding rule and rite (as sufficient)?"

Let him not think so.

Lord, the canker-freed monk,
who has lived the life,
done what was to be done,
who sees naught in himself to be done,

naught to be added to what has been done,
— by the fact of being passionless,
has applied himself to non-delusion
by destroying passion;
by the fact of being without hatred,
has applied himself to non-delusion
by destroying hatred;
by the fact of being without delusion,
has applied himself to non-delusion
by destroying delusion.

§

Lord,[11] if objects cognizable by the eye
come very strongly into the range of vision
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If sounds cognizable by the ear
come very strongly into the range of hearing
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If smells by the nose
come very strongly into the range of smell
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If tastes by the tongue
come very strongly into the range of taste
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If contacts by the touch
come very strongly into the range of contact
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If and ideas by the mind
come very strongly into the range of ideas
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

Imagine, lord, a mountain crag, cleftless, chasmless, massive;
and a squall to come very strongly from the east:
it would not shake, nor rock, nor stir that crag.

Or were a squall to come from the west:
it would not shake, nor rock, nor stir that crag.

Or were a squall to come from the north:
it would not shake, nor rock, nor stir that crag.

Or were a squall to come from the south,
it would not shake, nor rock, nor stir it.

▪

Even so, lord,
if objects cognizable by the eye
come very strongly into the range of vision
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If sounds cognizable by the ear
come very strongly into the range of hearing
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If smells by the nose
come very strongly into the range of smell
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If tastes by the tongue
come very strongly into the range of taste
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If contacts by the touch
come very strongly into the range of contact
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,
having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

▪

If and ideas by the mind
come very strongly into the range of ideas
of a monk, wholly freed in mind,
they obsess not his mind
and his mind is untroubled, firm,

having won to composure;
and he marks their set.

Dispassion, mind's detachment, harmlessness,
Grasping's and craving's end, mind undeluded:
Who hath applied himself to these, hath seen Sensations' rise[12] — his mind is wholly freed; [270] And in that monk, calmed, wholly freed, naught need
Be added to what's done, naught due is found.
As massive crag by wind is never moved,[13]
So sights, tastes, sounds, smells, touches, yea, the things Longed for and loathed, stir[14] not a man like that;
His mind stands firm, released; he marks their set."

---

[1] This is Soṇa-Koḷivisa; See Brethr. 275 ff.; the whole sutta recurs at Vin. i, 179-185, where a fuller version is given; VinA. offers no comment on our part. Our Comy. explains that these thoughts arose owing to his having walked up and down (till his feet bled), without avail.

[2] Sītavana. Comy. says it was a cemetery.

[3] Comy. quotes the following:

Satta sarā, tayo gāmā, mucchanā ekavīsati,||
Ṭhānā ekūnapaññāsaṅ, icc'ete sara-maṇḍalaṃ.|| ||

(Seven notes, three scales and one and twenty tones, Forty-nine stops, — such is the scope of music.)

P.E.D. generally omits these terms, but see Childers s.v. sara, quoting Abhidhāna-p-padīpikā.

[4] Same guṇe patiṭṭhitā.

[5] Vin. and S.e. read viriya-samataṅ with text, but Comy. -samathaṅ, explaining so; but see Vism. 129 (trsl. 150), indriya-samatta-; our Comy. refers to this passage. See note, Brethr. 277.

[6] Nimittaṅ the salient feature in anything. This has nothing to do with the term in later Jhāna technique.

[7] Aparena samayena.

[8] Aññā, but cf. Thag. 632 ff.

[9] Read sammadaññā-vimutto.

[10] Cf. Vin. ii, 74; iii, 158; S. iii, 168; A. iv, 355.

[11] Cf. A. iv, 404, with a different simile.

[12] Āyatan'uppādaṅ. Comy. āyatanānaṅ uppādañ ca vayañ ca, the rise and set.

[13] Cf. Dhp. 81; Th. i, 643 f.; Mil. 386 (quoting).

[14] p-pavedhenti, in the simile above, sampavedheyya.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 56

Phagguṇa Suttaṃ

Phagguna[1]

---

[270]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī.

Now[2] at that time
the venerable Phagguna was sick, ailing,
very ill;
and the venerable Ānanda
went to the Exalted One,
saluted,
and sat down at one side.

So seated,
he said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, the venerable Phagguna is sick,
ailing,
very ill.

Good were it, lord,
if the Exalted One

were to go and see the venerable Phagguna
out of compassion.'

And the Exalted One consented by silence.

Then in the evening,
after he had come from solitude,
the Exalted One visited the venerable Phagguna.

And the venerable Phagguna saw him coming,
when he was some way off,
and stirred[3] on his bed;
but the Exalted One spoke to him and said:

'Enough, Phagguna!

Stir not on your bed.

Are there not these seats here prepared already?

I will sit here.'

And he sat down
on the seat prepared.

So seated,
the Exalted One said:

'I hope, Phagguna, you're bearing up, keeping going;
that your aches and pains grow less,
not more;
that there are signs of their growing less,[4]
not more?

'Lord, I can neither bear up
nor keep going;
my aches and pains grow grievously more,
not less;
and there are signs of their growing more,
not less.

Lord,[5] the violent ache that racks my head
is just as though some lusty fellow chopped at it with a sharp-edged sword; [271] lord, I can neither bear up
nor keep going;
my pains grow more,
not less;
and there are signs of their growing more,
not less.

Lord, the violent pain in my head
is just as though some lusty fellow clapped a stout leather strap about it;
lord, I cannot bear up
nor keep going;
my pains grow more,
not less;
and there are signs of their growing more,
not less.

Lord, the violent stab
that shoots through my stomach is just as though a skilful butcher or his apprentice
gutted it with a carving knife;
lord, I cannot bear up
nor keep going;
my pains grow more,

not less;
and there are signs of their growing more,
not less.

Lord, the fever of my body is just as though a couple of lusty fellows had seized a weakling by his limbs and toasted him
and roasted him
over a fire-pit;
lord, I cannot bear bear up
nor keep going;
my pains grow more,
not less;
and there are signs of their growing more,
not less.'

So the Exalted One instructed him, roused him,
gladdened him
and comforted him
with Dhamma-talk,
then rose from his seat
and departed.

Now not long after the Exalted One's departure,
the venerable Phagguna died;
and at the time of his death
his faculties were completely purified.

Then went the venerable Ānanda
to the Exalted One,
saluted him,
and sat down at one side.

So seated, he said:

'Lord, not long after the Exalted One left,
the venerable Phagguna died;
and at that time
his faculties were completely purified.'

'But why, Ānanda,
should not the faculties of the monk, Phagguna,
have been completely purified?

The monk's mind, Ānanda, had[6] not been wholly freed
from the five lower fetters;
but, when he heard that Dhamma teaching,
his mind was wholly freed.

There are these six advantages, Ānanda,
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.

What six?

Consider, Ānanda, the monk
whose mind is not wholly freed
from the five lower fetters,
but, when dying,
is able to see the Tathāgata:
the Tathāgata teaches him Dhamma,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
its goodness,
its significance;
and makes known the godly life, [272] wholly fulfilled,
perfectly pure.

When he has heard that Dhamma teaching,
his mind is wholly freed
from the five lower fetters.

This, Ānanda,
is the first advantage
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.

▪

Consider, Ānanda, the monk
whose mind is not wholly freed
from the five lower fetters,
but, when dying,
though not just able to see the Tathāgata,
sees his disciple,
who teaches him Dhamma,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
its goodness,
its significance;
and makes known the godly life,
wholly fulfilled,
perfectly pure.

When he has heard that Dhamma teaching,
his mind is wholly freed
from the five lower fetters.

This, Ānanda,
is the second advantage
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.

▪

Consider, Ānanda, the monk
whose mind is not wholly freed
from the five lower fetters,
but, when dying,
though not able to see the Tathāgata
or his disciple,
continues to reflect in mind on Dhamma,
as heard,
as learnt,
ponders on it,
pores over it.

Then is his mind wholly freed
from the five lower fetters.

This, Ānanda,
is the third advantage
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.

▪

Consider, Ānanda,
the monk whose mind is wholly freed
from the five lower fetters,
whose mind is not wholly freed[7]
in respect of the complete destruction
of the root (of becoming);
who, when dying,
is able to see the Tathāgata:
the Tathāgata teaches him Dhamma,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
its goodness,
its significance;

and makes known the godly life,
wholly fulfilled,
perfectly pure.

When he has heard that Dhamma teaching,
his mind is wholly freed
in respect of the complete destruction
of the root of becoming.

This, Ānanda,
is the fourth advantage
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.

▪

Consider, Ānanda,
the monk whose mind is wholly freed
from the five lower fetters,
whose mind is not wholly freed
in respect of the complete destruction
of the root (of becoming);
who, when dying,
though not just able to see the Tathāgata,
sees his disciple,
who teaches him Dhamma,
lovely in the beginning,
lovely in the middle,
lovely in the end,
its goodness,
its significance;
and makes known the godly life,
wholly fulfilled,
perfectly pure.

When he has heard that Dhamma teaching,
his mind is wholly freed
in respect of the complete destruction
of the root of becoming.

This, Ānanda,
is the fifth advantage
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.

▪

Consider, Ānanda,
the monk whose mind is wholly freed
from the five lower fetters,
whose mind is not wholly freed
in respect of the complete destruction
of the root (of becoming);
who, when dying,
though not just able to see the Tathāgata,
or his disciple,
ever reflects in mind on Dhamma,
as heard,
as learnt,
ponders on it,
pores over it.

And as he does so,
his mind is wholly freed
as to the complete destruction
of the root of becoming.

This, Ānanda,
is the sixth advantage
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.

■

Verily, Ānanda,
these are the six advantages
in hearing Dhamma in time,
in testing its goodness in time.'

---

[1] S. iv, 52.

[2] S. iii, 119; iv, 46; M. ii, 192.

[3] We should read samañcopi. Comy. utthānākāraṃ dassesi.

[4] Paṭikkamosānaṃ, finality of receding, viz. health; see K.S. iii, 102 n.

[5] These similes recur at M. ii, 193; S. iv, 56; cf. also M. i, 243 ff.

[6] Cittaṃ avimuttaṃ ahosi, pluperfect.

[7] Cittaṃ avimuttaṃ hoti. S.e. so, but Comy. with v.l. adhi-, observing: arahatta-phalena adhimuttaṃ hoti. At Sn. 1149 we have adhimutta-cittaṃ; at A. iv, 239, [pg 240] cittaṃ hīne'dhimuttaṃ but I think the comment makes better sense if we read avimuttaṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 57

Chaḷ-Ābhijāti Suttaṃ

The Six Breeds[1]

---

[273]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One was dwelling on Mount Vulture Peak
near Rājagaha,,
the venerable Ānanda approached him,
saluted,
and sat down at one side.

So seated,
he said to the Exited One:

'Lord, six breeds
have been declared by Pūraṇa Kassapa:[2]
the black,
the blue,
the red,
the yellow,
the white
and the purest white.

■

Lord, here is the black breed declared by him:
mutton-butchers,
pork-butchers,
fowlers,
hunters,

thugs,[3]
fishermen,
robbers,
cut-throats,
jailers,
and all others
who follow a bloody trade.

▪

Here is the blue:
monks who live as though with a thorn[4] in the side,
and all others
who profess the deed and doing [theory].[5]

▪

Here is the red:
Jains[6] and loin-cloth folk.

▪

Here is the yellow:
white-robed householders and followers of naked ascetics.

▪

Here is the white:
fakirs and their disciples.

▪

And here, lord, is the breed of the purest white declared by Pūraṇa Kassapa: Nanda Vaccha,
Kisa Saṅkicca
and Makkhali Gosala.[7]

Lord, these are the six breeds declared by him.'

§

'But[8] what, Ānanda,
does the whole world
agree with Pūraṇa Kassapa in this declaration of his?'

'Certainly not, lord.'

▪

'Well, Ānanda,
just as men might thrust a piece of meat
on [274] some poor,
needy,
unwilling wretch,
saying:

"Here, sirrah,
eat this meat -
and pay for it too!"

Even so is Pūraṇa Kassapa's declaration to these recluses and brāhmans, made without their consent
as though by a foolish, witless numskull,
lacking common-sense.[9]

§

I, verily, Ānanda,
will declare the six breeds;
hear,
give heed,
I will speak!'

'Yes, lord,'
rejoined the venerable Ānanda;
and the Exalted One said:

'And what, Ānanda, are the six breeds?

There[10] are some of black breed, Ānanda, who breed black Dhamma;

some who breed white Dhamma;

some who breed Nibbāna, neither black nor white:

▪

there are some of white breed who breed white Dhamma;

some who breed black Dhamma;

and some who breed Nibbāna,
neither black nor white.

▪

And how, Ānanda,
breeds the black breed
black Dhamma?

Consider,[11] Ānanda,
one reborn in a low-caste clan -
pariah,
hunter,
weaver,
wheelwright,
sweeper —
in a poor family,
where food and drink are scarce,
life is hard,
keep and clothing hardly come by;
and he is ugly,
ill-featured,
misshapen
and much afflicted,
being blind,
deformed in hand,
lame
or crippled;
and is no recipient of food,
drink,
clothes,
carriages,
flowers,

scents,
ointments,
bed,
lodging
or lighting:
and suppose he wayfare in the wrong way
in deed,
word
and thought —
on the breaking up of the body after death,
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Thus, Ānanda,
some of the black breed
breed black Dhamma.

▪

And how, Ānanda,
breeds the black breed
white Dhamma?

Consider, again, one born in a low-caste clan -
pariah,
hunter,
weaver,
wheelwright,
sweeper —
in a poor family,
where food and drink are scarce,
life is hard,
keep and clothing hardly come by;
and he is ugly,

ill-featured,
misshapen
and much afflicted,
being blind,
deformed in hand,
lame
or crippled;
and is no recipient of food,
drink,
clothes,
carriages,
flowers,
scents,
ointments,
bed,
lodging
or lighting:
who wayfares in the right way
in deed,
word
and thought -
on the breaking up of the body after death,
he arises in the good way,
the heaven-world.

Thus, Ānanda,
some of the black breed
breed white Dhamma.

▪

[275] And how, Ānanda,
breeds the black breed Nibbāna,
neither black nor white?

Consider again, one born in a low-caste clan -
pariah,
hunter,
weaver,
wheelwright,
sweeper —
in a poor family,
where food and drink are scarce,
life is hard,
keep and clothing hardly come by;
and he is ugly,
ill-featured,
misshapen
and much afflicted,
being blind,
deformed in hand,
lame
or crippled;
who has his hair and beard shaved,
dons the yellow robe
and goes forth from the home
to the homeless life -
thus gone forth,
he rids himself of the five hindrances,
weakens the mental defilements by insight,
becomes firmly fixed
in the four arisings of mindfulness,
makes become the seven factors of awakening,
as they can become,[12]
and breeds Nibbāna,
neither black nor white.

Thus, Ānanda,
some of the black breed
breed Nibbāna,
neither black nor white.

▪

And how, Ānanda,
breeds the white breed
breed black Dhamma?

Consider one born in a high-caste clan:
noble,
brāhman
or householder,
owning stately homes,
riches,
wealth,
domains,
with gold and silver in plenty,
means and service in plenty,
corn and grain in plenty;
and is well-formed,
sightly,
pleasing,
blessed with a lily-like loveliness;
is a recipient of food,
drink,
clothes,
carriages,
flowers,
scents,
ointments,
bed,
lodging
and lighting:
and suppose he wayfare
in the wrong way
in deed,
word
and thought -

on the breaking up of the body after death,
he arises in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Thus, Ānanda,
some of the white breed
breed black Dhamma.

▪

And how, Ānanda, breeds the white breed white Dhamma?

Consider, again, one born in a high-caste clan:
noble,
brāhman
or householder,
owning stately homes,
riches,
wealth,
domains,
with gold and silver in plenty,
means and service in plenty,
corn and grain in plenty;
and is well-formed,
sightly,
pleasing,
blessed with a lily-like loveliness;
is a recipient of food,
drink,
clothes,
carriages,
flowers,
scents,
ointments,

bed,
lodging
and lighting:
who wayfares in the right way
in deed,
word
and thought -
on the breaking up of the body after death,
he arises in the good way,
the heaven-world.

Thus, Ānanda,
some of the white breed
breed white Dhamma.

▪

And how, Ānanda, breeds the white breed Nibbāna, neither black nor white?

Consider one born in a high-caste clan:
noble,
brāhman
or householder,
owning stately homes,
riches,
wealth,
domains,
with gold and silver in plenty,
means and service in plenty,
corn and grain in plenty;
and is well-formed,
sightly,
pleasing,
blessed with a lily-like loveliness;
who goes forth from the home

to the homeless life -
thus gone forth,
he rids himself of the five hindrances,
weakens the mental defilements by insight,
becomes firmly fixed
in the four arisings of mindfulness,
makes become the seven factors of awakening,
as they can become
and breeds Nibbāna,
neither black nor white.

Verily, Ānanda,
these are the six breeds.'

---

[1] Chaḷābhijātiyo see DA. i, 162; Dial. i, 72 n.; K.S. iii, 170; D. iii, 250.

[2] See Dial. i, 69; DA. i, 142.

[3] Luddā. Comy. dāruṇā, violent men. It is noteworthy that none were so 'black' as to kill cattle. This list recurs at M. i, 343; Pug. 56.

[4] Kaṇṭaka-vuttikā. Comy. samaṇā nām'ete. DA. eke pabbajitā; also te kira catusa paccayesu kaṇṭhake pakkhipitvā khādanti, which I suppose means that they 'hedge their ways with thorns'; cf. Hosea ii, 6.

[5] Kamma-, kiriya-vādā. See G.S. i, 265 n.; cf. above VI, § 38.

[6] Nigaṇṭhā.

[7] See F. Dial. i, 170, 371; they were naked ascetics. Comy. is silent; MA. ii, 285 gives no real information about them. See Dial. i, 73; K.S. iii, 61, on Makkhali.

[8] Cf. M. ii, 178, also i, 450.

[9] A-khetta'ññunā, no field-sense; at A. iv, 418, used of a cow.

[10] Kaṅhābhijātiyo samāno kaṅhaṃ dhammaṃ abhijāyati. Comy. and D. iii read -ābhijātiko, but S.e. as our text.

[11] This is all stock; see A. i, 107; ii, 85; S. i, 93.

[12] Yathā bhūtaṃ

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 58

Āsava Suttaṃ

The Cankers[1]

---

[276]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a monk endowed with six qualities is worthy of gifts,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted,
the world's peerless field for merit.

What six?

Herein, monks, the cankers to be got rid of by control by a monk are got rid of by control;
the cankers to be got rid of by use by a monk,
are got rid of by use;
the cankers to be got rid of by endurance by a monk,
are got rid of by endurance;
the cankers to be got rid of by avoidance by a monk,
are got rid of by avoidance;
the cankers to be got rid of by ejection by a monk,
are got rid of by ejection;
the cankers to be got rid of by growth by a monk,
are got rid of by growth.

§

And what, monks, are
the cankers to be got rid of by control,
which are got rid of by control?

Monks, consider the monk who
with conscious purpose[2]
lives controlled
by controlling the eye-faculties.

Whereas, were he to live uncontrolled,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since he lives controlled
by controlling the eye-faculties,
the cankers are not.

▪

So, too, monks, consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
lives controlled
by controlling the ear-faculties.

Whereas, were he to live uncontrolled,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since he lives controlled
by controlling the ear-faculties,
the cankers are not.

▪

So, too, monks, consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
lives controlled
by controlling the nose-faculties.

Whereas, were he to live uncontrolled,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since he lives controlled
by controlling the nose-faculties,
the cankers are not.

▪

So, too, monks, consider the monk who
with conscious purpose

lives controlled
by controlling the tongue-faculties.

Whereas, were he to live uncontrolled,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since he lives controlled
by controlling the tongue-faculties,
the cankers are not.

▪

So, too, monks, consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
lives controlled
by controlling the body-faculties.

Whereas, were he to live uncontrolled,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since he lives controlled
by controlling the body-faculties,
the cankers are not.

▪

So, too, monks, consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
lives controlled
by controlling the mind-faculties.

Whereas, were he to live uncontrolled,
the cankers,

vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since he lives controlled
by controlling the mind-faculties,
the cankers are not.

These, monks, are called
the cankers to be got rid of by control,
which are got rid of by control.

§

And what, monks, are
the cankers to be got rid of by use,
which are got rid of by use?

Consider, monks, the monk who
with conscious purpose
uses a robe
just to ward off cold,
heat,
the bite of gadfly,
gnat,
wind,
sun,
snake,
or just for a covering
or loin-cloth;

Whereas, were not the usage such,
the cankers,
vexatious,

tormenting,
would arise;
since the usage is such,
the cankers are not.

▪

Consider, monks, the monk who
with conscious purpose
uses alms
not for sport,
enjoyment,
adorning
or beautifying himself, but just to maintain and keep the body [277] in trim, to abate (hunger's) pangs,
to enter the godly life,
thinking:

"I'll crush out old feelings and not allow new ones to rise, and so blamelessness
and comfort
shall be mine!";

Whereas, were not the usage such,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the usage is such,
the cankers are not.

▪

Consider, monks, the monk who
with conscious purpose
uses a lodging
just to ward off cold,
heat,
the bite of gadfly,
gnat,
wind,
sun,
snake,
to dispel the dangers of the seasons' changes,
to enjoy solitude;

Whereas, were not the usage such,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the usage is such,
the cankers are not.

▪

Consider, monks, the monk who
with conscious purpose
uses medicaments for the sick to ward off attacks of disease's pains, or on the score of healing.

Whereas, were not the usage such,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the usage is such,
the cankers are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by use,
which are got rid of by use.

§

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by endurance,
which are got rid of by endurance?

Consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
bears cold,
heat,
hunger,
thirst,
the bite of gadfly, gnat,
wind,
sun
and snake,
the ways of speech,
irksome,
abusive;
endures the aches and pains that surge through the body, sharp,
rough,
piercing,
bitter,
galling,
deadly.

Whereas, were not the endurance such,
the cankers,
vexatious,

tormenting,
would arise;
since the endurance is such,
the cankers are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by endurance, which are got rid of by endurance.

§

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by avoidance, which are got rid of by avoidance?

Consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
avoids a savage elephant,
horse,
bull
or hound,
a snake,
tree-stumps,
thorny brakes,
ravines,
cliffs,
cesspools,
middens.

Whereas, were not the avoidance such,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;

since the avoidance is such,
the cankers are not.

▪

Consider the monk who
who with conscious purpose
avoids the forbidden seat, haunt
and evil friends -such that were he to sit there, wander in those haunts, associate with those evil friends,
his fellows in the godly life
might suspect him of misconduct.

Whereas, were not the avoidance such,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the avoidance is such,
the cankers are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by avoidance, which are got rid of by avoidance.

§

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by ejection, which are got rid of by ejection?

[278] Consider the monk who
with conscious purpose

allows no halt for the surge of lustful thoughts, rids himself of them,
ejects-them,
makes an end of them,
sends them to their eeasiitg;

Whereas, were not the ejection such
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the ejection is such,
the cankers are not.

▪

Consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
allows no halt for the surge of fell thoughts thoughts,
rids himself of them,
ejects-them,
makes an end of them,
sends them to their eeasiitg;

Whereas, were not the ejection such
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the ejection is such,
the cankers are not.

▪

Consider the monk who
with conscious purpose
allows no halt for the surge of cruel thoughts thoughts,

rids himself of them,
ejects-them,
makes an end of them,
sends them to their eeasiitg;

Whereas, were not the ejection such
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the ejection is such,
the cankers are not.

▪

Theses monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by ejection, which are got rid of by ejection.

§

And what, monks, are the cankers to be got rid of by growth, which are got rid of by growth?

Consider, monks, the monk who
with conscious purpose
grows the limb of awakening
that is mindfulness,
through solitude,
dispassion,
ending,
to the fullness of release;[3]

▪

who with conscious purpose
grows the limb of awakening
that is Dhamma-testing,
through solitude,
dispassion,
ending,
to the fullness of release;

▪

who with conscious purpose
grows the limb of awakening
that is energy,
through solitude,
dispassion,
ending,
to the fullness of release;

▪

who with conscious purpose
grows the limb of awakening
that is zest,
through solitude,
dispassion,
ending,
to the fullness of release;

▪

who with conscious purpose
grows the limb of awakening
that is tranquillity,
through solitude,
dispassion,
ending,
to the fullness of release

grows the limb of awakening
that is concentration,
through solitude,
dispassion,
ending,
to the fullness of release;

▪

who with conscious purpose
grows the limb of awakening
that is equanimity,
through solitude,
dispassion,
ending,
to the fullness of release.

Whereas, were not the growth such,
the cankers,
vexatious,
tormenting,
would arise;
since the growth is such,
the cankers are not.

These, monks, are called the cankers to be got rid of by growth,
which are got rid of by growth.

▪

Verily, monks, endowed with these six qualities
a monk is worthy of gifts,
worthy of offerings,
worthy of oblations,
meet to be reverently saluted
the world's peerless field for merit.'

---

[1] Cf. the whole sutta with M. i, 9 ff. (F. Dial. i, 4; S.B.E. xi, 296); our Comy. is much the same as MA. i, 75 ff.; but vision, the first of seven ways of riddance, is in our sutta omitted, leaving six ('scrutiny' in the M. trans. does not well coincide with dassana). According to M. the four cankers - kāma, bhava, ditthi, avijja - are to be multiplied by the number of 'sense-doors' - in the first instance - making twenty-four cankers to be got rid of by control. Here 'cankers' are left unspecified: any baneful tendency in the religious life. See DhS. trsl. 292; Expos. 476.

[2] Paṭisankhā yoniso; cf. for a similar expression Acts xi, 23.

[3] Vossagga-pariṇāmiṃ see K.S. i, 113 n., ava + √sṛj.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 59

Dāru-Kammika Suttaṃ

The Wood-Seller[1]

---

[278]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One was staying in the Brick Hall at Nādika,
a householder,
a wood-seller,
visited him,
saluted
and sat down at one side.

So seated, the Exalted One said to him:

'Maybe, householder, alms are given by your family?'

[279] '0 yes, lord, and in this way too:
such monks as are forest-gone, almsmen,
rag-wearers -
arahants
or men won to the arahant's Way - to them, lord, alms are given by my family.'

■

'But surely, householder, it's a hard thing for you -
a layman,
engrossed in pleasures,
encumbered with children,
odorous with Kāsi's sandalwood, decked with flowers and scented oils, merry with silver and gold[2] -
to tell which are arahants and which have won
to the arahants' Way!

■

If a forest-gone monk, householder, be puffed[3] up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
forgetful of mindfulness,
not self-possessed nor composed,
a scatter-brain,
rude in sense-governance -
he on that count is blameworthy;
if he be not puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
but upright in mindfulness,
self-possessed,
composed,
one-pointed,
controlled in faculties -
he on that count is praiseworthy.

■

So, too, if a monk
dwelling on the village outskirts
be puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
forgetful of mindfulness,
not self-possessed nor composed,
a scatter-brain,
rude in sense-governance -
he on that count is blameworthy;
if he be not puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
but upright in mindfulness,
self-possessed,
composed,
one-pointed,
controlled in faculties -
he on that count is praiseworthy.

▪

So, too, if a monk,
an almsman
be puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
forgetful of mindfulness,
not self-possessed nor composed,
a scatter-brain,
rude in sense-governance -
he on that count is blameworthy;
if he be not puffed up,

proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
but upright in mindfulness,
self-possessed,
composed,
one-pointed,
controlled in faculties -
he on that count is praiseworthy.

▪

So, too, if a monk,
a guest[ed1]
be puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
forgetful of mindfulness,
not self-possessed nor composed,
a scatter-brain,
rude in sense-governance -
he on that count is blameworthy;
if he be not puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
but upright in mindfulness,
self-possessed,
composed,
one-pointed,
controlled in faculties -
he on that count is praiseworthy.

▪

So, too, if a monk,
a rag-wearer
be puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
forgetful of mindfulness,
not self-possessed nor composed,
a scatter-brain,
rude in sense-governance -
he on that count is blameworthy;
if he be not puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
but upright in mindfulness,
self-possessed,
composed,
one-pointed,
controlled in faculties -
he on that count is praiseworthy.

▪

So, too, if a monk
the wearer of the householder's robe,[4]
be puffed up,
proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
forgetful of mindfulness,
not self-possessed nor composed,
a scatter-brain,
rude in sense-governance -
he on that count is blameworthy;
if he be not puffed up,

proud,
excitable,
a mouthy speechifier,
but upright in mindfulness,
self-possessed,
composed,
one-pointed,
controlled in faculties -
he on that count is praiseworthy.

§

Nevertheless, householder, give alms to the Order.

An you do so,
your heart will become tranquil;
and tranquil in heart,
you will, on the breaking up of the body after death,
arise in the good way,
the heaven-world.'

'I, too, lord, henceforth from today will give alms to the Order.'

---

[1] Dāru-kammika.

[2] Cf. A, iv, 281; Ud, 65.

[3] See above V, § 167; VI, § 46.

[4] Gahapati-cīvara-dhara, the robe given by a householder, not from the rag heap. F. Dial, i, 21, [Ed.?] 'clad in lay attire,' and so also P.E.D. Bu. in both places is silent.

[ed1] Hare has abridged this list such that it is possible to read it as meaning any guest, but what is intended in all cases is a bhikkhu who is of such a sort. Here one who has accepted an invitation to a meal. Bhk. Bodhi has done this more clearly with: "If a bhikkhu who accepts invitations to meals ...".

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 60

Citta Hatthisāriputta Suttaṃ

Citta Hatthisāriputta[1]

---

[279]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One dwelt near Benares in the Deer Park at Isipatana,
a number of elders,
[280] who had returned from alms-gathering, and fed,
sat together in the round hall
and talked a talk on Abhidhamma.[ed1]

Now from time to time the venerable Citta Hatthisariputta broke in on their talk.

And the venerable Mahā Koṭṭhita said to him:

'Let not the venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta constantly interrupt the elders' Abhidhamma talk;
the venerable Citta should wait until the talk is over!'

■

And when he had thus spoken,
Citta's friends said:

'The venerable Mahā Koṭṭhita should not censure the venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta.

A wise man is the venerable Citta and able to talk to the elders on Abhidhamma.'

▪

'Tis a hard thing,[2] sirs, for those who know not another person's ways of thought.

▪

Consider, sirs, a person who,
so long as he lives near the Master or a fellow-teacher in the godly life,
is the most humble[3] of the humble,
the meekest of the meek,
the quietest of the quiet;
and who,
when he leaves the Master
or his fellow-teachers,
keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters[4]
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Suppose, sirs, an ox,
a meadow-browser,
were kept tied by a rope or closed in a byre -
would he say rightly,
who should say:

"Never now will that meadow-browser venture again to a meadow"?'[5]

'No, indeed, sir,
such a thing does not happen,
since that ox,
used to browsing in meadows,
would, on snapping its rope or breaking out of the byre, venture down to the meadow again.'

▪

'It is even so, sirs, where a person - so long as he is near the Master or a fellow-teacher -
is the most humble of the humble,
the meekest of the meek,

the quietest of the quiet;
but who, on leaving the Master
or his fellow-teachers,
keeps company [281] with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Consider again a person who,
aloof from sensuous appetites,
aloof from evil ideas,
enters and abides in the first musing.

Thinking:

"I've won to the first musing,"

he keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,

their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Suppose, sirs, the rain-deva rains heavy rains
at the four cross-roads, lays the dust
and makes mud -
would he say rightly,
who should say:

"Never now will dust again appear at these four cross-roads"?

'No, indeed, sir,
since along those four cross-roads
men,
oxen
and cows
might pass
or the wind and heat might dry up the moisture;
and then the dust would appear again.'

▪

'It is even so, sirs,
where a person who,
aloof from sensuous appetites,
aloof from evil ideas,
enters and abides in the first musing
thinking:

"I've won to the first musing,"

keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Then consider a person who,
suppressing applied and sustained thought,
enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of joy and ease.

Thinking:

"I've won to the second musing,"

he keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Suppose, sirs,[6] a great lake near some village or town and the rain-deva were to rain great rains and cover the mussels and shells
and sand
and pebbles -
would he say rightly,
who should say:

"Never now in this great lake shall the mussels,
shells,
sand

and pebbles
appear again"?'

'No, indeed, sir,
since men,
oxen
and cows might come
and drink from the great lake or wind and heat dry up the moisture;
and then the mussels,
shells,
sand
and pebbles would appear again.'

▪

'It is even so, sirs,
where a person who,
suppressing applied and sustained thought,
enters and abides in the second musing,
which is self-evolved,
born of concentration,
full of joy and ease,
thinking:

"I've won to the second musing,"

keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Consider then the person who,
free from the fervour of zest,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease.

Thinking:

"I've won to the third musing,"

he keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;

and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Suppose, sirs, last[7] night's food please [282] not a man filled with good food -
would he say rightly,
who should say:

"Never now shall food please this man again"?

'No, indeed, sir,
that is not the case;
so long as the strength of the good food remain in his body, other food shall not please that man;
but when that strength has gone,
then shall food please him.'

▪

'It is even so, sirs,
where a person who,
free from the fervour of zest,
mindful and self-possessed,
he enters and abides in the third musing,
and experiences in his being
that ease whereof the Ariyans declare:
'He that is tranquil and mindful dwells at ease,
thinking:

"I've won to the third musing,"

keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Consider the person who,
putting away ease and ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill.

Thinking:

"I've won to the fourth musing,"

he keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,

rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Imagine,[8] sirs,
a mere in a mountain glen,
windless,
waveless -
would he say rightly,
who should say:

"Never now on this mere shall waves appear again"?

'No, indeed, sir,
since were a squall to come very strongly from the east,
it would bring waves to the mere;
since were a squall to come very strongly from the west,
it would bring waves to the mere;
since were a squall to come very strongly from the north,
it would bring waves to the mere;
since were a squall to come very strongly from the south,
it would bring waves to the mere.'

▪

'It is even so, sirs, where a person who,
putting away ease and ill,
by the passing away of happiness and misery
he was wont to feel,
he enters and abides in the fourth musing,
which is utter purity of mindfulness,
which comes of disinterestedness
and is free of ease and ill,
thinking:

"I've won to the fourth musing,"

keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

And consider the person who,
paying no attention to the signs in things,

enters and abides
in the signless mental concentration.

Thinking:

"I have won to the signless mental concentration,"

he keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,
given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

▪

Suppose, sirs, a rajah
or his minister
with the four hosts of the army were to come up the high road and pitch their camp for one night in the forest
and the sound of the cricket be drowned by the sound of elephant,
horse,
chariot

and foot-soldier,
by the sound of tabor,
drum [283]
and conch —
would he say rightly,
who should say:

"Never now in this forest shall the cricket be heard again'?

'No, indeed, sir,
that is not the case,
for when the rajah and his minister have left the forest, the cricket shall be heard again.'

▪

'It is even so, sirs,
where a person,
inattentive to the signs in things,
enters and abides in the signless mental concentration,
and, thinking:

"I've won to the signless mental concentration,"

keeps company with monks,
nuns,
lay-disciples,
men and women,
rajahs,
their ministers,
course-setters
or their disciples.

Living in company,
untrammelled,
rude,

given over to gossip,
passion corrupts his heart;
and with his heart corrupted by passion,
he disavows the training
and returns to the lower life.

§

And presently the venerable Citta Hatthisariputta disavowed the training
and returned to the lower life.

Then Citta's friends went to the venerable Mahā Koṭṭhita
and said:

'Did the venerable Mahā Koṭṭhita discover Citta Hatthisāriputta
by mind compassing mind[9]
concerning the thought:

"This and that state of attainment
has Citta won to,
but he will give up the training
and return to the lower life" -

or did devas tell him this thing:

"Citta Hatthisariputta, sir,
has won this and that state of attainment,
but he'll return to the lower life"?'

'Reverend sirs,
I discovered it by mind compassing mind
concerning the thought:

"This and that state of attainment
has Citta won to,
but he will give up the training
and return to the lower life"
but devas also told me:

"Citta Hatthisariputta, sir,
has won this and that state of attainment,
but he'll return to the lower life"'[10]

▪

Then the venerable Citta's friends
approached the Exalted One,
saluted him
and sat down at one side;
and so seated,
they said to him:

'Lord, Citta Hatthisāriputta
has won to this and that state of attainment, yet he has disavowed the training
and returned to the lower life.'

▪

'Citta, monks, will ere long bethink him of renouncing [the worldly life].'

▪

And[11] not long after,
Citta Hatthisāriputta had his hair [284] and beard shaved off, donned the yellow robe
and went forth from the home
to the homeless life.

And the venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta,
living alone,
secluded,
earnest,
ardent,
resolved,
not long after,
entered and abode in that aim above all
of the godly life -
realizing it here and now
by his own knowledge -
for the sake of which clansmen rightly go forth from the home
to the homeless life;
and he knew:

'Birth is destroyed,
the godly life is lived,
done is what was to be done,
there is no more of this.'

And the venerable Citta Hatthisāriputta
was numbered among the arahants.

---

[1] See D. i, 190 ff.; Dial. i, 256 n. DA. ii, 378 says he was tho son of an elephant-driver, quick at learning, and refers to the incident in our sutta, adding that the conversation was between Moggailāna and Koṭṭhita.

[2] Dujjānaṃ, a hard knowing.

[3] Soratasorato, nivātanivāto, upasant'upasanto.

[4] See above VI, § 54.

[5] Kiṭṭha, a stubble-field; cf. S. iv, 196 for simile.

[6] Cf. D. i, 89; M. i, 279; A. i, 9.

[7] Cf. M. ii, 255; our text reads abhidosikaṃ, S.e. ābhi-, Comy. ābhi-dosiyaṃ.

[8] Cf. D. i, 84; M. ii, 22.

[9] Cetasā ceto paricca.

[10] This is admitted several times by the Founder or recorded of him (see No. 62), pointing to a tradition preceding the omniscience-cult of him, but has so far not been found recorded of a disciple.

[11] All this recurs at D. i, 202 ff. Comy. observes: this elder went forth seven times. And why? Because in the time of Kassapa Buddha he praised the householder's life to a monk.

[ed1] Abhidhammakathaṃ. Higher-dhamma-talk; not talk on [the] Abhidhamma. Hare has capitalized the term, so he must have had this incorrect idea in mind, but that work did not exist at this time.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 61

Majjhe Suttaṃ

The Way to the Beyond[1]

---

[284]

Thus have I heard:

Once, when the Exalted One dwelt near Benares in the Deer Park at Isipatana,
a number of elders,
who had returned from alms-gathering, and fed,
sat together in the round hall;
and this talk by change arose:

'This, sirs, was said by the Exalted One in "The Way to the Beyond," in the questions of Metteyya.[2]

"Who knows both ends — not midst[3] that sage is soiled:
Him call I 'great man'; he here hath passed the seamstress."

And what, pray, is the first end, what's the second,
what's in the middle and who's the seamstress?'

§

Now after this had been said,
one of the monks answered the elders and said:

'Contact, sirs, is the first end,
its arising is the second,
its ceasing is in the middle,
and craving is the seamstress;
for craving sews one
just to this ever-becoming birth.[4]

Indeed, sirs, to this extent
a monk knows the know- [285] able,
comprehends the comprehensible;
and knowing the knowable,
comprehending the comprehensible,
he makes an end of Ill,
here now.

▪

And when he had thus spoken, another said:

'The past is the first end,
the future the second,
the present is in the middle,
and craving is the seamstress;
for craving sews one
just to this ever-becoming birth.

Indeed, sirs, to this extent
a monk knows the knowable,

comprehends the comprehensible;
and knowing the knowable,
comprehending the comprehensible,
he makes an end of Ill,
here now.

▪

And another said:

'Pleasure[5] is the first end,
pain is the second,
indifference is in the middle,
and craving is the seamstress;
for craving sews one
just to this ever-becoming birth.

Indeed, sirs, to this extent
a monk knows the knowable,
comprehends the comprehensible;
and knowing the knowable,
comprehending the comprehensible,
he makes an end of Ill,
here now.

▪

And another said:

'Name is the first end,
form is the second,
consciousness is in the middle,
and craving is the seamstress;
for craving sews one
just to this ever-becoming birth.

Indeed, sirs, to this extent
a monk knows the knowable,
comprehends the comprehensible;
and knowing the knowable,
comprehending the comprehensible,
he makes an end of Ill,
here now.

▪

And another said:

'One's six sense-organs are the first end,
the other six outer objects are the second,
consciousness is in the middle,
and craving is the seamstress;
for craving sews one
just to this ever-becoming birth.

Indeed, sirs, to this extent
a monk knows the knowable,
comprehends the comprehensible;
and knowing the knowable,
comprehending the comprehensible,
he makes an end of Ill,
here now.

▪

And another said:

'Life's bundle[6] is the first end,
its arising is the second,
its ceasing is in the middle,
and craving is the seamstress;
for craving sews one
just to this ever-becoming birth.

Indeed, sirs, to this extent
a monk knows the knowable,
comprehends the comprehensible;
and knowing the knowable,
comprehending the comprehensible,
he makes an end of Ill,
here now.

§

And when he had finished speaking, another monk addressed the elders and said:

'We have all, reverend sirs, replied as the matter appeared to each one of us.

Let us go and visit the Exalted One and tell him.

As the Exalted One declares,
so will we bear in mind.'

'Very well,' rejoined the elders;
and they approached the Exalted One,
saluted and sat down at one side.

And so seated, they told him all the words and talk that had passed between them, adding:

'Lord, who spoke best?'

'Each one of you, monks,
in his own way

spoke well;
but as to what I spoke of in
"The Way to the Beyond,"
in Metteyya's questions:

[286] "Who knows both ends — not midst that sage is soiled: Him call I 'great man'; he here hath passed the seamstress."

listen,
pay good heed,
I will speak!'

'Yes lord,' they replied;
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, contact, monks, is the first end,
its arising is the second,
its ceasing is in the middle,
and craving is the seamstress;
for craving sews a man
just to this ever-becoming birth.

Verily, monks, it is to this extent that a monk knows the knowable,
comprehends the comprehensible;
and knowing the knowable,
comprehending the comprehensible,
he makes an end of Ill,
here now.'

---

[1] Pārāyana.

[2] See Sn. 1042; S.e. with Sn. and our Comy. read lippati.

[3] 'Him first, him last, him midst and without end' (Milton, Paradise Lost, v, 165)

[4] Tassa tass'eva bhavassa abhinibbattiyā. The seamstress, sibbanī, recurs at DhS. § 1059; craving as jālinī occurs in S. (K.S. i, 134); G.S. ii, 225; Dhp. 180;Th. i, 162, 908.

[5] See D. iii, 216 and ref. there. [Ed.: ?]

[6] Sakkāya; see above VI, § 14.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 62

Puris'Indriya-Ñāna Suttaṃ

The Solemn Utterance[1]

---

[286]

[1]Thus have I heard:

Once, while the Exalted One walked a walk among the Kosalese
with a great company of the Order's monks, he came to a Kosalan town called Dandakappaka.[2]

And the Exalted One
stepped down from the road and sat on a seat made ready
at the foot of a tree;
but the monks entered Dandakappaka to seek a lodging.

▪

Now the venerable Ānanda,
with a number of monks,
went to the river Aciravatī[3]
to bathe his limbs;
and after he had bathed

and had come out,
he stood in one garment drying his limbs.[4]

Then a monk approached the venerable Ānanda
and said:

'Ānanda, reverend sir,
was it after concentrating his whole mind[5]
that Devadatta was declared by the Exalted One:

"Gone[6] wayward,
hell-bound for a kalpa,
unpardonable is Devadatta" -

or was it from some deva-source (he learnt it)?'

[287] 'It was even as the Exalted One has declared.'[7]

▪

Now the venerable Ānanda approached the Exalted One,
saluted
and sat down at one side;
and so seated,
he told the Exalted One:

"Now I, bhante,
with a number of monks,
went to the river to bathe our limbs;
and after I had bathed
and had come out,
I stood in one garment
drying my limbs.

Then a monk approached me and said:

'Ānanda, reverend sir,
was it after concentrating his whole mind
that Devadatta was declared by the Exalted One:

"Gone wayward,
hell-bound for a kalpa,
unpardonable is Devadatta" -
or was it from some deva-source?'

And I responded:

'It was even as the Exalted One has declared.'

▪

(Then said the Exalted One:)

'Either, Ānanda,
that monk must be new,
not long gone forth,
or if an elder,
a witless one.

How, when I have definitely declared it, can there be an alternative?

I know not another person of whom this was declared by me, after full mental concentration, save of Devadatta.

And so long, Ānanda,
as I saw a bright spot[8] in Devadatta, even the prick-end of a horse-hair[9] in size,
I declared not:

"Gone wayward,
hell-bound for a kalpa,
unpardonable is Devadatta!"

but it was when I saw none, that I declared:

"Gone wayward,
hell-bound for a kalpa,
unpardonable is Devadatta!"

▪

'Imagine,[10] Ānanda,
a cesspool,
of a man's depth,
brimful of dung
and a man fallen in,
head and all -
though a man appear,
ready to help,
to do the friendly,
to set him in safety,
to lift him out;
yet were he to go all round that cesspool,
he would not see
even the prick-end of a horse-hair of that man unsmeared with dung
by which to grasp
and lift him out.

▪

And it is even so with Devadatta, Ānanda, when I saw not a bright spot in him - not even the prick-end of a horse-hair in size - then I declared:

"Gone wayward,
hell-bound for a kalpa,
unpardonable is Devadatta!"

§

Wouldst thou hear, Ānanda, the Tathāgata analyzing the feelings and thoughts of man?'

'This is the time, 0 Blessed One;
this is the time, 0 Well-gone,
for the Exalted One
to analyze men's feelings and thoughts!'

The monks having heard will bear it in mind.'

'Well, hearken, Ānanda,
pay good heed,
I will speak.'

'Yes, lord,'
rejoined the venerable Ānanda;
and the Exalted One said;

'Suppose, Ānanda,
by mind compassing mind,
I know this [288] of some person:

"There is both good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The good has disappeared,
the evil is uppermost;
but the root of goodness
is not cut off
and from that good will proceed.

Thus in future
he is bound not to fall."

-○-

If,[11] Ānanda, seed,
neither split,
rotten,
nor spoilt by wind and heat,
but vital,[12]
well-seasoned,
be thrown on well-tilled ground
in a goodly field;
can you say for certain:

"It will yield its growth, increase
and abundance"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Even so, Ānanda,
by mind compassing mind,
I know of some person:

"There is good and evil in him"

and then
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The good has disappeared,
the evil is uppermost;
but the root of goodness
is not cut off
and from that good will proceed.

Thus in future
he is bound not to fall."

Verily, Ānanda,
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the person of man is known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the feelings and thoughts of man
are known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind comparing mind,
the future rise of things[13]
is known to the Tathāgata.

▪

Or suppose, by mind compassing mind,
I know this of some person:

"There is both good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The good has disappeared,
the evil is uppermost;
and the root of goodness
is cut off
and from that evil will proceed.

Thus in future
he is bound to fall."

-○-

If seed,
neither split,
rotten,
nor spoilt by wind and heat,
but vital,
well-seasoned,
be thrown on stony ground,
can you say for certain:

"It'll not yield its growth,
increase
or abundance"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Even so, Ānanda, I know of some person:

"There is both good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The good has disappeared,
the evil is uppermost;
and the root of goodness
is cut off
and from that evil will proceed.

Thus in future
he is bound to fall."

Verily, Ānanda,
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the person of man is known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the feelings and thoughts of man
are known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind comparing mind,
the future rise of things
is known to the Tathāgata.

▪

Or suppose, by mind compassing mind,
I know this of some person:

"There's not a bright spot
the size of a hair's prick-end in him";

and being [289] utterly black in his evil,
he will, on the broking up of the body after death,
arise in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

-○-

Ānanda, if seed,
split,
rotten,
spoilt by wind and heat,
be thrown on well-tilled ground
in a goodly field;
can you say for certain:

"It'll not yield growth,
increase
or abundance"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Even so, Ānanda, by mind compassing mind,
I know this of some person:

"There's not a bright spot
the size of a hair's prick-end in him";

and being utterly black in his evil,
he will, on the broking up of the body after death,
arise in the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

Verily, Ānanda,
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the person of man is known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the feelings and thoughts of man
are known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind comparing mind,

the future rise of things
is known to the Tathāgata.

▪

Now, when he had thus spoken,
the venerable Ānanda said to the Exalted One:

'Lord, is it possible to declare other three counterparts of these three persons?'

'It is, Ānanda,'
and the Exalted One said:

'Suppose, Ānanda,
by mind compassing mind,
I know this of some person:

"There is both good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The good has disappeared,
the evil is uppermost;
but the root of goodness
is not cut off,
yet he goes about to uproot it altogether.

Thus he is bound to fall in future."

-○-

If, Ānanda, burning,
blazing,

fiery coals
are thrown on stony ground;
can you say for certain:

"They'll not grow,
increase
or spread"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Or when in the evening
the sun sets,
can you say for certain:

"Light will go,
darkness will come"?'

'Yes. surely, lord.'

-○-

'Or[14] later on,
when night is part-spent and men eat;
can you say for certain:

"Light has gone,
darkness is come"?

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Even so, Ānanda, I know of some person:

"There is both good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The good has disappeared,
the evil is uppermost;
but the root of goodness
is not cut off,
yet he goes about to uproot it altogether.

Thus he is bound to fall in future."

Verily, Ānanda,
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the person [290] of man is known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the feelings and thoughts of man
are known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind comparing mind,
the future rise of things
is known to the Tathāgata.

▪

Or suppose,
by mind compassing mind,
I know of some person:

"There is both good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The evil has disappeared,
the good is uppermost;

and though he has not cut off the root of evil
he goes about to uproot it all together.

Thus he is bound not to fall in future."

-○-

If, Ānanda, burning,
blazing,
fiery coals
are thrown on a heap of dry grass or sticks;
can you say for certain:

"They'll grow, increase and spread"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Or when dawn faces night and the sun mounts up,
can you say for certain:

"Darkness will go,
light will come"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Or[15] later on,
at midday,
at meal time,
can you say for certain:

"Darkness has gone,
light is come"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Even so, Ānanda, I know of some person:

"There is both good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"The evil has disappeared,
the good is uppermost;
and though he has not cut off the root of evil
he goes about to uproot it all together.

Thus he is bound not to fall in future."

Verily, Ānanda,
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the person of man is known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the feelings and thoughts of man
are known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind comparing mind,
the future rise of things
is known to the Tathāgata.

▪

Or suppose,
by mind compassing mind,
I know of some person:

"There is good and evil in him."

Then presently,
by mind compassing mind,
I know:

"There is not in him
evil amounting to a hair's prick-end,
and being exceedingly pure in faultlessness,
he will, here now,
become completely cool."[16]

-○-

If, Ānanda,
coals,
cold and extinct,[17]
be thrown on a heap of dry grass or sticks;
can you say for certain:

"These coals will not grow,
increase
or spread"?'

'Yes, surely, lord.'

-○-

'Even so, Ānanda,
by mind compassing mind,
I know of some person:

"There is good and evil in him "-

then presently:

"There is not even a hair's prick-end of evil in him;
and being exceedingly pure in faultlessness,

he will, here now,
become completely cool."

-○-

Verily, Ānanda,
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the person of man is known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind compassing mind,
the feelings and thoughts of man
are known to the Tathāgata;
thus, by mind comparing mind,
the future rise of things
is known to the Tathāgata.

[291] There, Ānanda,
of those first three persons,
one is bound not to fall,
one is bound to fall
and one goes the wayward way, hell-bound:
and of the last three persons,
one is bound not to fall,
one is bound to fall
and one is bound for Nibbāna.'[18]

---

[1] The text reads udakaṃ with S.e., but one MS. udānaṃ.

[2] Comy. is silent; I find no mention of this town elsewhere. Daṇḍaka forest (M. i, 378; Mil. 130) was in the Dekkan, see Chwang, ii, 199.

[3] Sāvatthī was close to this river (? Gandak); see M. ii, 113; Chwang, i, 398.

[4] Cf. above VI, § 43.

[5] Sabba-ceitaso samannāharitvā.

[6] Cf. Vin. ii, 202; A. iv, 100; It. 85.

[7] See above VI, § 44, and Comy.'s remark there, n. 7.

[8] Sukkaṃ dhammaṃ.

[9] See Dial. ii, 151 n.; G.S. i, 60 n.

[10] Cf. M. i, 74; D. ii, 324; Vin. iii, 106.

[11] Cf. D. ii, 354; S. iii, 54; v, 380; A. i, 135. We may compare the Parable of the Sower (Mark iv, 1, etc.)

[12] Sāradāni. Comy. sārādāni gahita-sārāni, sarade māse vā nibbattāni. See K.S. iii, 46 n.

[13] Dhammasamuppādo. In K.S. v, 323 rendered '(question of) doctrine arising,' which scarcely fits the present context.

[14] Abhidose aḍḍha-rattaṃ bhatta-kāla-samaye. Comy. reads abhido, observing: abhi-aḍḍha-rattaṃ, aḍḍha-ratte abhimukhe bhūte. S.e. is as our text. Abhidose I take to mean later on than evening, and aḍḍha-rattaṃ between 9 and 11 o'clock, which is when many Easterners take their meal. Comy. remarks rajahs and clansmen eat at the time referred to.

[15] Abhidose majjhantike.

[16] Parinibbāyissaii.

[17] Sītāni nibbutāni.

[18] Parinibibbāna-dhammo.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 63

Nibbedhika Suttaṃ

A Penetrative Discourse[1]

---

[291]

'Monks, I will teach you a penetrative discourse, a Dhamma discourse.

Listen,
pay heed,
I will speak!'

'Yes, lord,' rejoined those monks;
and the Exalted One said:

'And what, monks, is this penetrative discourse, this Dhamma-discourse?

§

Monks, sense-desires must be discerned,
their tie-source,[2]
variety,[3]

fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto.

▪

Monks, feelings must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto.

▪

Monks, perceptions must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto.

▪

Monks, cankers must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto.

▪

Monks, action must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,

ending,
and the steps leading thereto.

■

Monks, ill must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto.

§

[3][than][olds]Monks, it is said:

"Sense-desires[ed1] must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and wherefore is this said?

■

Monks, the strands[4] of sense-desires are five:
Forms cognizable by the eye, luring, longed for, loved, enticing, lustful, impassioning;
sounds cognizable by the ear, luring, longed for, loved, enticing, lustful, impassioning; smells by the nose, luring, longed for, loved, enticing, lustful, impassioning;
tastes by the tongue, luring, longed for, loved, enticing, lustful,

impassioning;
touches by the body, luring, longed for, loved, enticing, lustful,
impassioning.

Though these are not sense-desires, monks,
in the Ariyan discipline they are called the strands of the sense-desires.

In passionate purpose lies man's sense-desire[5] —
The world's gay glitters are not sense-desires,
In passionate purpose lies man's sense-desire.
The world's gay glitters as they are abide,
But wise men hold desire therefore in check."

▪

And what is the tie-source of sense-desires?

Contact, monks.

▪

And what is sense-desires' variety?

One sense-desire is for forms, another for sounds,
another for smells,
another for tastes,
another for touch.

This, monks, is called sense-desires' variety.

▪

And what is sense-desires' fruit?

When desiring aught,
one engenders just that proper state of being
to partake of merit or demerit.

This, monks, is called sense-desires' fruit.

▪

And what is sense-desires' ending?

Contact's ending is sense-desires' ending, monks.

▪

And just in this Ariyan Eightfold Way are the steps leading to sense-desires' ending, to wit:
right view,
right purpose,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness and
right concentration.

▪

And when the Ariyan disciple thus knows sense-desires,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending
and the steps leading thereto;
he knows this penetrative godly life
as sense-desires' ending.

▪

Monks, it is said:

"Sense-desires must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and because of this it is said.

§

[5][than][olds]Monks, it is said:

"Feelings must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and wherefore is this said?

▪

Monks, feelings are these three:
feeling of ease,
feeling of ill,
and feeling of neither ill nor ease.

▪

And what is feelings' tie-source?

Contact, monks.

▪

And what is feelings' variety?

There are feelings of ease that are carnal,[6]
there are feelings of ease that are not;
there are feelings of ill that are carnal,
there are feelings of ill that are not;
there are feelings of neither ill nor ease that are carnal, there are feelings of neither ill nor ease that are not.

This, monks, is called feelings' variety.

▪

And what is feelings' fruit?

When feeling aught,
one engenders just that proper state of being
to partake of merit or demerit.

This, monks, is called feelings' fruit.

▪

And what is feelings' ending?

Contact's ending, monks.

▪

And just in this Ariyan Eightfold Way are the steps leading to feelings' ending, to wit:
right view,
right purpose,
right speech,

right action,
right livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness and
right concentration.

▪

And when the Ariyan disciple thus knows feelings,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending
and the steps leading thereto;
he knows this penetrative godly life
as feelings' ending.

▪

[293] Monks, it is said:

"Feelings must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and because of this it is said.

§

[7][than][olds]Monks, it is said:

"Perceptions must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and wherefore is this said?

▪

Monks, perceptions are these six:
Perceptions of forms,
sounds,
smells,
tastes,
touches and ideas.

▪

And what is perceptions' tie-source?

Contact, monks.

▪

And what is perceptions' variety?

There is one perception as to forms, another as to sounds
another as to smells,
another as to tastes,
another as to touches.

This, monks, is called perceptions' variety.

▪

And what is perceptions' fruit?

I say, monks, perceptions are the result of habit.[7]

As one comes to know a thing, so one expresses oneself:

"Thus I perceived."

This, monks, is called perceptions' fruit.

▪

And what is perceptions' ending?

Contact's ending, monks.

▪

And just in this Ariyan Eightfold Way are the steps leading to perceptions' ending, to wit:
right view,
right purpose,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness and
right concentration.

▪

And when the Ariyan disciple thus knows perceptions,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending

and the steps leading thereto;
he knows this penetrative godly life
as perceptions' ending.

▪

Monks, it is said:

"Perceptions must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and because of this it is said.

§

Monks, it is said:

"Cankers must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and wherefore is this said?

▪

Monks, cankers are these three:
canker of lust,

of becoming and
of ignorance.[8]

▪

And what is cankers' tie-source?

Ignorance, monks.

▪

And what is cankers' variety?

There are cankers that lead to hell,
to a beast's womb,
to the realm of the departed,
to the world of man and to the deva-world.

This, monks, is called cankers' variety.

▪

And what is cankers' fruit?

When ignorant,
one engenders just that proper state of being
to partake of merit and demerit.

This, monks, is called cankers' fruit.

▪

And what is cankers' ending?

Ending of ignorance, monks.

▪

And just in this Ariyan Eightfold Way are the steps leading to [294]
cankers' ending, to wit:
right view,
right purpose,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness and
right concentration.

▪

And when the Ariyan disciple thus knows cankers,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending
and the steps leading thereto;
he knows this penetrative godly life
as cankers' ending.

▪

Monks, it is said:

"Cankers must be discerned,
their tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and because of this it is said.

§

[11][than][olds]Monks, it is said:

"Action must be discerned,[9]
its tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and wherefore is this said?

▪

Monks, I say that
'determinate thought is action.[10]

When one determines,
one acts by deed,
word or
thought.

And what is actions' tie-source?

Contact, monks.

▪

And what is actions' variety?

There is action that is experience in hell,
there is action that is experience in a beast's womb
there is action that is experience in the deva-world.

This, monks, is called actions' variety.

▪

And what is actions' fruit?

I say that it is threefold:

It may either rise here now or at another time
or on the way.[11]

This, monks, is called actions' fruit.

▪

And what is action's ending?

Contact's ending, monks.

▪

And just in this Ariyan Eightfold Way are the steps leading to action's ending, to wit:
right view,
right purpose,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness and
right concentration.

▪

And when the Ariyan disciple thus knows action,
its tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending
and the steps leading thereto;

he knows this penetrative godly life
as actions' ending.

▪

Monks, it is said:

"Action must be discerned,
its tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and because of this it is said.

§

[13][than][olds]Monks, it is said:

"Ill must be discerned,
its tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending and
the steps leading thereto"
— and wherefore is this said?

▪

Birth is ill,
old age is ill,
disease is ill,
death is ill;

grief, sorrow,
misery, distress,
tribulation are ill,
not to get what one wants is ill
— in short, (life's) fivefold bunch of clinging[12] is ill.

▪

[295] And what is ill's tie-source?

Craving, monks.

And what is ill's variety?

Ill that is above measure;
ill that is trifling;
ill that is quick to change;
and ill that is slow to change.

This, monks, is called ill's variety.

▪

And what is ill's fruit?

Consider one overcome by ill,
in mind forspent
— he grieves,
mourns,
laments,
beats his breast and
becomes bewildered;
or roams[13] abroad
in search of one who knows a spell or two to end his ill.

Ill yields bewilderment and search, I say.

This, monks, is called ill's fruit.

▪

And what is ill's ending?

Craving's ending, monks.

▪

And just in this Ariyan Eightfold Way are the steps leading to ill's ending,
to wit:
right view,
right purpose,
right speech,
right action,
right livelihood,
right effort,
right mindfulness and
right concentration.

▪

And when the Ariyan disciple thus knows ill,
its tie-source,
its variety,
its fruit,
its ending and
the steps leading thereto;
then he knows this penetrative godly life
as ill's ending.

▪

Monks, it is said:

"Ill must be discerned,
its tie-source,
variety,
fruit,
ending,
and the steps leading thereto."
— and because of this it is said.

Verily, monks, such is this penetrative discourse,
this Dhamma-discourse.'

---

[1]Nidāna-sambhavo. Comy. Kāme nideti; P.E.D. omits.

[2]Vemattatā.

[3]Kāma-guṇā, Comy. Bandhanaṭṭhena guṇā, antaguṇan-ti viya.

[4]Noteworthy here is the word puriso not ejected by puggalo, and kāmo in the singular; cf. the Upanishadic use; Brh. Up. iv. 4, 5: 'so it is said, man is wholly formed of kāmo.'

[5] S. i, 22; see K.S. i, 32 and Pts. of Contr. 216. 'Desire,' last line = chanda.

[6]Samisā and nir; cf. D. ii. 298.

[7]Vohāra-vepakka; cf. Vism. 602; trsl. 726.

[8]Note that we have here retained the three (not the four) cankers. So Dial. iii. p. 209.

[9]Kamma or karma, considered both objectively and subjectively; see P.E.D. s.v. and elsewhere.

[10]Cetandhaṅ kammaṅ vadāmi; see Mrs. Rhys Davids' Buddh. Psych. 93; Pts. of Contr. 225.

[11]Ti-vidhāhaṅ kammānaṅ vipākaṅ vadāmi: Diṭṭh'eva dhamme upapajje vā apare vā pariyāye. S.e. for eva reads vā. But if tividha, we must read pariyāye vā (?). Cf. the fourfold effect in time at Cpd. 144; Vism. trsl. 724; but I am not certain whether this is referred to.

[12] Pānc'upādāna-kkhandhā. Cf. Vin. Texts (S.B.E.), i, 95, etc.

[13]Cf. D. i, 222.

[ed1] Hare here has "Sense-desires and so forth ..." but the text only refers to "kāmā".

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VI. Mahā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VI: The Great Chapter

Sutta 64

Sīha-Nāda Suttaṃ

The Lion-Roar

---

[295]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied, and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these are the six[1] Tathāgata-powers of a Tathāgata, possessed of which the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

What six?

Herein, monks, the Tathāgata knows as fact[2]
base from base,
non-base from non-base.[3]

In that the Tathāgata knows as fact
base from base,
non-base from non-base,
it is a Tathāgata's Tathāgata-power
whereby the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

■

Again, the Tathāgata knows as fact
the result,
with its base and cause,
of action's moulding[4]
in respect of the past,
future [296]
and present[ed1].

-○-

In that the Tathāgata knows as fact
the result,
with its base and cause,
of action's moulding
in respect of the past,
future
and present
it is a Tathāgata's Tathāgata-power
whereby the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

■

He knows the stain, purity and emergence[5]
in musing,

deliverance
and concentration attainments.

-○-

In that the Tathāgata knows of the stain, purity and emergence
in musing,
deliverance
and concentration attainments
it is a Tathāgata's Tathāgata-power
whereby the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

■

He remembers many a previous dwelling with its circumstances and details:[ed2]

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,

such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life.

Faring on thence
I arose there.

There such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life.

Faring on thence
I arose here.

Thus he remembers many a previous dwelling with its circumstances and details.

-○-

In that the Tathāgata remembers many a previous dwelling with its circumstances and details:

One birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each such was my name,
such my clan,

such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life.

Faring on thence
I arose there.

There such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life.

Faring on thence
I arose here.

it is a Tathāgata's Tathāgata-power
whereby the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

▪

With the purified deva-eye,
surpassing the human eye,
he sees and knows beings
in course of faring on -
beings lowly and exalted,
beautiful and ugly,
happy and in woe,
according to their deeds.[ed3]

Thinking:

"These worthies were given over to evil practices
in act, word and thought,
were revilers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
men who have acquired this karma
from wrong views;
and on the breaking up of the body after death,
have arisen in the untoward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

But these good sirs behaved rightly
in act, word and thought,
were no revilers of the Ariyans,
held right views
and have acquired this karma therefrom;
and on the breaking up of the body after death,
have arisen in the blissful heaven world."

Thus with the purified deva-eye,
surpassing the human eye,
he sees and knows beings
in course of faring on -
beings lowly and exalted,
beautiful and ugly,
happy and in woe,
according to their deeds.

-○-

In that the Tathāgata with the purified deva-eye,
surpassing the human eye,
sees and knows beings
in course of faring on -
beings lowly and exalted,

beautiful and ugly,
happy and in woe,
according to their deeds.

Thinking:

"These worthies were given over to evil practices
in act, word and thought,
were revilers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
men who have acquired this karma
from wrong views;
and on the breaking up of the body after death,
have arisen in the untoward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell.

But these good sirs behaved rightly
in act, word and thought,
were no revilers of the Ariyans,
held right views
and have acquired this karma therefrom;
and on the breaking up of the body after death,
have arisen in the blissful heaven world."

it is a Tathāgata's Tathāgata-power
whereby the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

▪

Destroying the cankers,
the Tathāgata enters and abides in mind-emancipation,
in insight-emancipation,
canker-free

having realized that state
by his own
even in this very life.

-○-

In that the Tathāgata by destroying the cankers, enters and abides in mind-emancipation,
in insight-emancipation,
canker-free
having realized that state
by his own knowledge
even in this very life,
it is a Tathāgata's Tathāgata-power
whereby the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

Monks, these are the six Tathāgata-powers of a Tathāgata, possessed of which the Tathāgata claims the place of the bull,
roars the lion-roar in assemblies
and sets a-roll the Brahmā Wheel.

§

And if, monks, others come and question the Tathāgata because of his knowledge, as fact, of
base from base,
non-base from non-base;
according as the Tathāgata's knowledge, as fact of[ed4]
base from base,

non-base from non-base prevails,
so the Tathāgata explains to them
by knowledge as fact,
when questioned.

▪

Or if others come and question him because of his knowledge, as fact,
of the result,
with its base and cause,
of action's moulding
in respect of the past,
future
and present,
according as the Tathāgata's knowledge, as fact
of the result,
with its base and cause,
of action's moulding
in respect of the past,
future
and present prevails,
so the Tathāgata explains to them
by knowledge as fact,
when questioned.

▪

Or if others come and question him
because of his knowledge, as fact,
of the stain, purity and emergence
in musing,
deliverance
and concentration attainments
according as the Tathāgata's knowledge, as fact
of the stain, purity and emergence

in musing,
deliverance
and concentration attainments prevails,
so the Tathāgata explains to them
by knowledge as fact,
when questioned.

▪

Or if others come and question him
because of his knowledge, as fact,
of many a previous dwelling
with its circumstances and details[ed5]
according as the Tathāgata's knowledge as fact,
of many a previous dwelling
with its circumstances and details prevails,
so the Tathāgata explains to them
by knowledge as fact,
when questioned.

▪

Or if others come and question him
because of his knowledge, as fact,
of seeing and knowing beings,
with the purified deva-eye,
surpassing the human eye,
in course of faring on -
beings lowly and exalted,
beautiful and ugly,
happy and in woe,
according to their deeds
according as the Tathāgata's knowledge, as fact
of seeing and knowing beings,
with the purified deva-eye,
surpassing the human eye,

in course of faring on -
beings lowly and exalted,
beautiful and ugly,
happy and in woe,
according to their deeds prevails,
so the Tathāgata explains to them
by knowledge as fact,
when questioned.

▪

Or if others come and question him
because of his knowledge, as fact,
of the destruction of the cankers,
entering on and abiding in mind-emancipation,
in insight-emancipation,
canker-free
having realized that state
by his own knowledge
even in this very life
according as the Tathāgata's knowledge, as fact,
of the destruction of the cankers,
entering on and abiding in mind-emancipation,
in insight-emancipation,
canker-free
having realized that state
by his own knowledge
even in this very life prevails,
so the Tathāgata explains to them
by knowledge as fact,
when questioned.

§

Now, this knowledge, as fact, of
base from base,
non-base from non-base,
I declare it to be the possession of the concentrated,
not of the unconcentrated.

▪

Now, this knowledge, as fact, of
the result,
with its base and cause,
of action's moulding
in respect of the past,
future
and present,
I declare it to be the possession of the concentrated,
not of the unconcentrated.

▪

Now, this knowledge, as fact, of the stain, purity and emergence
in musing,
deliverance
and concentration attainments,
I declare it to be the possession of the concentrated,
not of the unconcentrated.

▪

Now, this knowledge, as fact, of
many a previous dwelling
with its circumstances and details,
I declare it to be the possession of the concentrated,
not of the unconcentrated.

▪

Now, this knowledge, as fact, of seeing and knowing beings
with the purified deva-eye,
surpassing the human eye,
in course of faring on -
beings lowly and exalted,
beautiful and ugly,
happy and in woe,
according to their deeds,
I declare it to be the possession of the concentrated,
not of the unconcentrated.

▪

Now, this knowledge, as fact, of
the destruction of the cankers,
entering on and abiding in mind-emancipation,
in insight-emancipation,
canker-free
having realized that state
by his own knowledge
even in this very life,
I declare it to be the possession of the concentrated,
not of the unconcentrated.

Thus, verily, monks, concentration is the Way, non-concentration the no-whither way.[6]

---

[1] See Pts. of Contr. 140; M. i, 67; A. v, 33.

[2] Yathābhūtaṃ.

[3] Ṭhāna and aṭṭhāna. Comy. kāraṇa.

[4] Kamma-samādāna.

[5] See Compendium, 67 ff.

[6] Samādhi maggo, asamādhi kummaggo.

[ed1] Atītānāgatapaccuppannāna. Hare has 'past, present, future'.

[ed2] Hare abridges, this is taken from his translation of AN 9.35; see also AN 5.23

[ed3] Hare abridges, this is taken from his translation of AN 9.35; see also AN 5.23

[ed4] Hare omits the second repetition in each of the following.

[ed5] The Pali text is here, and in the next the short statement as translated. No indication of abridgement.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 65

Anāgāmi-Phala Suttaṃ

The Non-Returner

---

[297]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
one cannot realize the fruit of the Non-returner.

What six?

Disbelief,
shamelessness,
recklessness,
indolence,

forgetfulness in mindfulness
and foolishness.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six things,
one cannot realize the fruit of the Non-returner.'

§

But if one give up them six things,
one can realize the fruit of the Non-returner.

What six?

Disbelief,
shamelessness,
recklessness,
indolence,
forgetfulness in mindfulness
and foolishness.

Verily, monks, if one gives up these six things,
one can realize the fruit of the Non-returner.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 66

Arahatta Sacchi-Karoti Suttaṃ

The Arahant

---

[297]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
one cannot realize arahantship.

What six?

Sloth,
torpor,
flurry,
worry,

disbelief
and heedlessness.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
one cannot realize arahantship.'

§

But if one give up six things,
one can realize arahantship.

What six?

Sloth,
torpor,
flurry,
worry,
disbelief
and heedlessness.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
one can realize arahantship.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 67

Mitta Suttaṃ

Friends

---

[297]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, monks, that a monk who is an evil friend,
an evil comrade,
an evil companion,
serving,
attending,
honouring evil friends,
emulating their ways of thought,
shall fulfil the Dhamma-fore-course[1] -
that cannot be;

and that without fulfilling the course, he shall fulfil the Dhamma-training -
that cannot be;

and that without fulfilling the training,
he shall fulfil the virtues -
that cannot be;

and that without fulfilling the virtues,
he shall give up lustful passion,
passion for the material or for the immaterial -
that cannot be.

§

But that a monk who is good friend, comrade,
companion,
serving,
attending,
honouring good friends,
emulating their ways of thought,
shall fulfil the Dhamma-fore-course -
that surely shall be;

and that on the fulfilment of the fore-course, he shall fulfil the training -
that surely shall be;

and that on the fulfilment of the training,
he shall fulfil the virtues[2] - [298] that surely shall be;

and that on the fulfilment of the virtues,
he shall give up lustful passion,
passion for form
and for the formless -
that surely shall be.'

---

[1] Abhi-sam-ācār-ika dhamma; see above V, § 21.

[2] It seems a jumble here, that sīlāni should not have come first, since they must be presupposed in the foregoing. Unless the four brahma-vihāras are meant by sīlāni. Possibly a corrupt recension.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 68

Sangaṇ'ik-ā-rāma Suttaṃ

Company[1]

---

[298]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, monks, that a monk delighting in company,
delighted by company,
absorbed in the delights of company, delighting in gatherings,[2]
delighted by gatherings, absorbed in the delights of gatherings,
shall find delight alone,
in seclusion -
that cannot be;

and that without finding delight in seclusion,
he shall grasp the salient fact of mind -
that cannot be;

and that without grasping the salient fact of mind,
he shall become perfect in right view -
that cannot be;

and that without becoming perfect in right view,
he shall become perfect in right concentration -
that cannot be;

and that without becoming perfect in right concentration,
he shall abandon the fetters -
that cannot be;

and that without abandoning the fetters,
he shall realize Nibbāna -
that cannot be.'

§

'But verily, monks,
that a monk not delighting in company,
not delighted by company,
not absorbed in the delights of company,
not delighting in gatherings,
not delighted by gatherings,
not absorbed in the delights of gatherings,
shall find delight alone,
in seclusion -
that can be;

and that with finding delight in seclusion,
he shall grasp the salient fact of mind -
that can be;

and that with grasping the salient fact of mind,
he shall become perfect in right view -
that can be;

and that with becoming perfect in right view,
he shall become perfect in right concentration -
that can be;

and that with becoming perfect in right concentration,
he shall abandon the fetters -
that can be;

and that with abandoning the fetters,
he shall realize Nibbāna -
that can be.'

---

[1] Both our text and S.e. in the Uddāna omit mention of this.

[2] Comy. says of Suttanta-repeaters or fellows of his own sort.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 69

Devatā Suttaṃ

The Deva

---

[298]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

Now[1] when the night was well advanced,
a deva,
shedding rays of far-reaching loveliness
over Jeta Grove,
visited the Exalted One,
saluted
and stood at one side;
and, so standing,
he spoke thus to the Exalted One:

'Lord, there are these six things
that lead not to a monk's falling away.

What six?

Reverence for Teacher,
reverence for the Dhamma
reverence for the Order,
reverence for the training,
grace in speech
and good friendship.

Lord, these six things
lead not to a monk's falling away.'

Thus spoke that deva
and the Teacher approved.

And the deva,
perceiving that the Master agreed,
saluted
and disappeared thence,
keeping the Exalted One on his right.

§

Now, at the end of that night,
the Exalted One addressed the monks
and told them:

"Monks, when the night was well advanced,
a deva,
shedding rays of far-reaching loveliness

over Jeta Grove,
visited me,
saluted
and stood at one side;
and, so standing,
he spoke thus:

"Lord, there are these six things
that lead not to a monk's falling away.

What six?

Reverence for Teacher,
reverence for the Dhamma
reverence for the Order,
reverence for the training,
grace in speech
and good friendship.

Lord, these six things
lead not to a monk's falling away."

Thus spoke that deva and I approved.

And the deva,
perceiving that I agreed,
saluted
and disappeared thence,
keeping me on his right.'

§

[299] And when he had spoken, the venerable Sāriputta saluted the Exalted One
and said:

'Lord, the meaning of the Exalted One's brief words
I thus understand in full:

Suppose, lord, a monk himself
reveres the Teacher
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, lord, a monk himself
reveres Dhamma
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, lord, a monk himself
reveres the Order,
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence

in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, lord, a monk himself
reveres the training
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, lord, a monk himself
reveres grace in speech
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, lord, a monk himself
reveres good friendship

and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

It is thus I understand in full the Exalted One's brief words.'

▪

'Well said, well said, Sāriputta,
it is just as you say:

Suppose, Sāriputta, a monk himself
reveres the Teacher
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, Sāriputta, a monk himself
reveres Dhamma
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,

truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, Sāriputta, a monk himself
reveres the Order
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, Sāriputta, a monk himself
reveres the training
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

▪

So, too, Sāriputta, a monk himself
reveres grace in speech
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it

he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

■

So, too, Sāriputta, a monk himself
reveres good friendship
and praises such reverence;
he will instil such reverence
in others who lack it;
and of those who possess it
he will speak in praise,
justly,
truly
and timely.

And, Sāriputta,
thus the full meaning of my brief words ought to be understood.'

---

[1] Sovacassatā, from su-vacā; cf. the Epistle to the Colossians iv, 6

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 70

Samādhi Suttaṃ

Psychic Power[1]

---

[299]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, monks, that a monk,
without the peace of concentration
in high degree,
without attaining to calm,
without winning one-pointedness,
shall have part in the many psychic powers:

▪

That being one,
he becomes many;
being many,
he becomes one;
he becomes visible or invisible;
goes without let
through walls,
through fences,
through mountains,
as if they were but air;
he dives in and out of the earth,
as if it were but water;
he walks on water
without parting it,
as if it were earth;
he travels cross-legged through the air,
as a bird on the wing;
he handles and strokes the moon and the sun,
though they be so powerful and strong;
he scales the heights of the world
even in this body -

that cannot be;

▪

That with the celestial means of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he hears sounds
both of devas and mankind,
both far and near -

that cannot be;

▪

That by mind compassing mind he knows
the thoughts of other beings,
other persons;
he knows the passionate mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the malignant mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the infatuated mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the congested mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the diffuse mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the lofty mind as such,
the low mind as such;
he knows the better mind as such,
the inferior mind as such;
he knows the controlled mind as such,
the uncontrolled as such;
he knows the liberated mind as such,
the mind not freed as such -

that cannot be;

▪

That he remembers previous lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,

many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each,
such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
that faring on thence
I arose there,
when such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
faring on thence
I arose here;
thus he calls to mind
each detail and circumstance
of my many previous dwellings -

that cannot be;

▪

That with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he sees beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,

some happy,
some miserable;
he sees them pass
according to their works;
thus these worthies
were given over to evil ways
in deed,
word
and thought,
defamers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
reaping the reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in hell,
the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
or,
those acted rightly
in deed,
word
and thought,
they were no defamers of the Ariyans,
but held right views
and reaped their reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in heaven,
that happy place of bliss;
thus, with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he sees beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,

some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
he sees them pass
according to their works -

that cannot be;

▪

That by destroying the cankers
enters and abides
in the canker-free mind-emancipation,
insight-emancipation,
realizing this here and now
entirely by his own knowledge.

that cannot be.

§

But, monks, that a monk,
with the peace of concentration
in high degree,
with attaining to calm,
with winning one-pointedness,
shall have part in the many psychic powers:

▪

That being one,
he becomes many;
being many,

he becomes one;
he becomes visible or invisible;
goes without let
through walls,
through fences,
through mountains,
as if they were but air;
he dives in and out of the earth,
as if it were but water;
he walks on water
without parting it,
as if it were earth;
he travels cross-legged through the air,
as a bird on the wing;
he handles and strokes the moon and the sun,
though they be so powerful and strong;
he scales the heights of the world
even in this body -

that can be;

▪

That with the celestial means of hearing,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he hears sounds
both of devas and mankind,
both far and near -

that can be;

▪

That by mind compassing mind he knows
the thoughts of other beings,
other persons;
he knows the passionate mind as such,

the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the malignant mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the infatuated mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the congested mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the diffuse mind as such,
the mind free therefrom as such;
he knows the lofty mind as such,
the low mind as such;
he knows the better mind as such,
the inferior mind as such;
he knows the controlled mind as such,
the uncontrolled as such;
he knows the liberated mind as such,
the mind not freed as such -

that can be;

▪

That he remembers previous lives,
that is to say,
one birth,
two births,
three births,
four, five,
ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty,
a hundred births,
a thousand births,
a hundred thousand births,
many an aeon of progression,
many an aeon of destruction,
many an aeon of both progression and destruction;
that in each,

such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
that faring on thence
I arose there,
when such was my name,
such my clan,
such my caste,
such my food,
such my experience of happiness and ill,
such my span of life;
faring on thence
I arose here;
thus he calls to mind
each detail and circumstance
of my many previous dwellings -

that can be;

▪

That with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he sees beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;
he sees them pass
according to their works;

thus these worthies
were given over to evil ways
in deed,
word
and thought,
defamers of the Ariyans,
holders of wrong views,
reaping the reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in hell,
the wayward way,
the ill way,
the abyss,
hell;
or,
those acted rightly
in deed,
word
and thought,
they were no defamers of the Ariyans,
but held right views
and reaped their reward accordingly,
such, on the breaking up of the body after death,
were reborn in heaven,
that happy place of bliss;
thus, with the celestial eye,
purified and surpassing that of men,
he sees beings faring on
and being reborn,
some low,
some lofty,
some beautiful,
some ugly,
some happy,
some miserable;

he sees them pass
according to their works -

that can be;

■

That by destroying the cankers
enters and abides
in the canker-free mind-emancipation,
insight-emancipation,
realizing this here and now
entirely by his own knowledge.

that can be."

---

[1] The Uddāna omits.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 71

Sakkhibhabba Suttaṃ

The Eyewitness

---

[299]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk be possessed of six things,
he cannot become this and that,
so as to be bound personally to attain,
given the opportunity.[1]

What six?

[300] Suppose, monks, a monk know not as a fact:

"These[2] things partake of failure,"

or,

"These things partake of stability,"

or,

"These things partake of distinction,"

or,

"These things partake of penetration,"

nor is he zealous
nor helpful.

Monks, if a monk be possessed of these six,
he cannot become this and that,
so as to be bound personally to attain,
given the opportunity.'

§

But, monks, if a monk be possessed of six things,
he can become this and that,
so as to be bound personally to attain,
given the opportunity.

What six?

Suppose, monks, a monk know as a fact:

"These things partake of failure,"

or,

"These things partake of stability,"

or,

"These things partake of distinction,"

or,

"These things partake of penetration,"

and is he zealous
and helpful.

Monks, if a monk be possessed of these six,
he can become this and that,
so as to be bound personally to attain,
given the opportunity.'

---

[1] We have here the terms hard to render of bhabbo and bhabbatā, is to, or should, become, and the abstract noun of the same. Cf. hereon Mrs. Rhys Davids' Manual, p. 128; Sakya, p. 324; Khp. vi, 11.

[2] The Comy. refers to Vism.; see trsl. ii, 103; cf. D. iii, 277; A. ii, 167.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 72

Bala Suttaṃ

Strength

---

[300]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk be possessed of six things,
he cannot win strength in concentration.

What six?

Suppose, monks, a monk be not skilled in attaining concentration, nor skilled in maintaining concentration,
nor skilled in emerging therefrom,
nor is he zealous,

nor persevering
nor helpful.

Monks, if a monk be possessed of these six,
he cannot win strength in concentration.'

§

But, monks, if a monk be possessed of six things,
he can win strength in concentration.

What six?

Suppose, monks, a monk be skilled in attaining concentration,
skilled in maintaining concentration,
skilled in emerging therefrom,
is zealous,
persevering
helpful.

Monks, if a monk be possessed of these six,
he can win strength in concentration.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 73

Paṭhama Jhāna Suttaṃ

Musing

---

[300]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
one cannot enter and abide
in the first musing.

What six?

Sense-desires,
ill-will,
sloth and torpor,

flurry and worry,
doubt;
and lust's perils are not seen clearly as such
by right insight.

Monks, save one give up these six,
one cannot enter and abide
in the first musing.

§

But, monks, if one give up six things,
one can enter and abide
in the first musing.

What six?

Sense-desires,
ill-will,
sloth and torpor,
flurry and worry,
doubt;
and lust's perils are seen clearly as such
by right insight.

Monks, if one give up these six,
one can enter and abide
in the first musing.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VII. Devatā Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VII: The Devas

Sutta 74

Dutiya Paṭhama Jhāna Suttaṃ

Musing 2

---

[300]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
one cannot enter and abide
in the first musing.

What six?

[301] Brooding on sense-desire,
brooding on ill-will
brooding on cruelty;

conjuring up thoughts of lust,
conjuring up thoughts of ill-will
conjuring up thoughts of cruelty.

Monks, save one give up these six,
one cannot enter and abide
in the first musing.

§

But, monks, if one give up six things,
one can enter and abide
in the first musing.

What six?

Brooding on sense-desire,
brooding on ill-will
brooding on cruelty;
conjuring up thoughts of lust,
conjuring up thoughts of ill-will
conjuring up thoughts of cruelty.

Monks, if one give up these six,
one can enter and abide
in the first musing.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 75

Dukkha Suttaṃ

Ill at Ease

---

[301]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow six things,
he will live ill at ease here now, vexed with himself,[1]
troubled,
fretful;
and, on the breaking up of the body after death,
an ill-faring is to be expected.

What six?

Brooding on sense-desire,
brooding on ill-will
brooding on cruelty;
conjuring up thoughts of lust,
conjuring up thoughts of ill-will
conjuring up thoughts of cruelty.

Monks, if a monk follow these six,
he will live ill at ease at ease here now,
vexed with himself,
troubled,
fretful;
and, on the breaking up of the body after death,
an ill-faring is to be expected.

§

Monks, if a monk follow six things,
he will live happily here now,
neither vexed,
troubled,
nor fretful;
and, on the breaking up of the body after death,
a well-faring may be expected.

What six?[2]

Reflecting on renunciation, reflecting on freedom from ill-will reflecting on freedom from cruelty;
conjuring up thoughts of renunciation, conjuring up thoughts of freedom from ill-will conjuring up thoughts of freedom from cruelty.

Verily, monks, if a monk follow these six things,
he will live happily here now,
neither vexed,
troubled,
nor fretful;
and, on the breaking up of the body after death,
a well-faring may be expected.'

---

[1] Sa-vighātaṃ.

[2] Text and S.e. omit.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 76

Arahatta Suttaṃ

Arahantship

---

[301]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
one cannot realize arahantship.

What six?

Conceit,[1]
underrating,
overrating,
complacency,

stubbornness,
instability.[2]

[302] Monks, save one give up these six, one cannot realize arahantship.

§

But, monks, if one give up six things,
one can realize arahantship.

What six?

Conceit,
underrating,
overrating,
complacency,
stubbornness,
instability.

Monks, if one give up these six, one can realize arahantship.

---

[1] Mānaṃ, o-, ati-, adhi-, from √man, to think (man-like). Māna, pride, conveys the old English idea of 'vain conceits.' See above, p. 255.

[2] Atinipātaṃ. P.E.D. omits, but see Crit. Pāli Dict., where the Comy. is quoted as 'to the base I am base.' To us it suggests the opposite error to thambha, since the Comy. meaning is a replica of omāna. Cf. vv.ll. in P.T.S. ed. of text. Atinipātta is 'excessive falling over.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 77

UttarīManussa-Dhamma Suttaṃ

Beyond

---

[302]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
one cannot realize the excellence
of true Ariyan knowledge and insight, beyond man's state.

What six?

Forgetfulness in mindfulness,
lack of self-possession,

unguardedness as to the sense-doors,
lack of moderation in eating,
deceit
and mealy-mouthed.

Monks, save one give up these six,
one cannot realize the excellence
of true Ariyan knowledge and insight,
beyond man's state.

§

But, monks, if one give up six things,
one can realize the excellence
of true Ariyan knowledge and insight,
beyond man's state.

What six?

Forgetfulness in mindfulness,
lack of self-possession,
unguardedness as to the sense-doors,
lack of moderation in eating,
deceit
and mealy-mouthed.

Monks, if one give up these six,
one can realize the excellence
of true Ariyan knowledge and insight,
beyond man's state.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 78

Sukha-Somanassa Suttaṃ

Happiness

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow six things,
he will live here now
in great happiness and contentment,
and for him the mould has begun to form[1]
for destroying the cankers.

What six?

Herein a monk delights in Dhamma,
in growth,
in renunciation,
in solitude,
in being free of ill-will
and in non-diffuseness.[2]

Monks, if a monk follow these six,
he will live here now
in great happiness and contentment,
and for him the mould has begun to form
for destroying the cankers.'

---

[1] Yoni c'assa āraddhā hoti.

[2] Nippapañcārāmo. Comy. Nippapañca-saṅkhāte Nibbāne ramati. Cf. above for papañca (always a difficult rendering), p. 210.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 79

Adhigama Suttaṃ

Attainment[1]

---

[302]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk possess six things,
he cannot attain unattained skill in Dhamma,
nor increase his skill attained therein.

What six?

Herein a monk is unskilled in entering,
in leaving,
in approach,

has no wish to attain unattained skill in Dhamma, preserves not his skill attained,
nor stirs to persevere.

Verily, monks, if a monk possess these six,
he cannot attain [303] unattained skill in Dhamma,
nor increase his skill attained therein.

§

But, monks, if a monk possess six things,
he can attain unattained skill in Dhamma,
and increase his skill attained therein.

What six?

Herein a monk is skilled in entering,
in leaving,
in approach,
has the wish to attain unattained skill in Dhamma, preserves his skill attained,
and stirs to persevere.

Verily, monks, if a monk possess these six things,
he can attain unattained skill in Dhamma,
and increase his skill attained therein.

---

[1] Adhigama

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 80

Mahantatta Suttaṃ

Greatness

---

[303]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, endowed with six things a monk shall in no long time win to greatness and growth
in right things.

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk has clear sight in much,
application in much,

zest in much,
dissatisfaction in much,
shirks not the burden of right things,
and drives across to the beyond.[1]

Verily, monks, endowed with these six, a monk shall win to greatness and growth
in right things
in no long time.'

---

[1] Uttariṃ patāreti, a striking and unique (?) phrase.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 81

Paṭhama Niraya Suttaṃ

Hell (1)

---

[303]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, following six things,
one is duly cast in hell.

What six?

One takes life,
takes what is not given,
lives carnally,
lies,

has evil desires
and wrong views.

Verily, monks, following these six,
one is duly cast in hell.'

§

But, monks, following six things,
one is duly cast in heaven.

What six?

One abstains from taking life,
one abstains from taking what is not given,
one abstains from living carnally,
one abstains from lies,
one has few desires
one has right views.

Verily, monks, following these six,
one is duly cast in heaven.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 82

Dutiya Niraya Suttaṃ

Hell (2)

---

[303]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, following six things,
one is duly cast in hell.

What six?

One lies,
is slanderous,
harsh,
a babbler,

greedy,
reckless.

Verily, monks, following these six,
one is duly cast in hell.'

§

But, monks, following six things,
one is duly cast in heaven.

What six?

One abstains from lies,
one abstains from slander,
one abstains from harshness,
one abstains from idle babble,
one is not greedy
one is not reckless.

Verily, monks, following these six,
one is duly cast in heaven.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 83

Agga-Dhamma Suttaṃ

The Chief Thing

---

[303]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk be possessed of six things,
he cannot become[1] one
to realize the chief thing,
arahantship.

What six?

Herein a monk
is without faith,

modesty
or fear of blame,
is indolent,
lacks insight
and hankers after action[2] and life.

Monks, if a monk be possessed of these six,
he cannot become one
to realize the chief thing,
arahantship.'

§

But, monks, if a monk be possessed of six things,
he can become one
to realize the chief thing,
arahantship.

What six?

Herein a monk
has faith,
modesty
and fear of blame,
is not indolent,
has insight
and hankers not after action and life.

Monks, if a monk be possessed of these six,
he can become one
to realize the chief thing,
arahantship.'

[1] Abhabbo. See above, p. 299, n. 3.

[2] Or 'body' (kāye).

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
VIII. Arahatta Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter VIII: Arahantship

Sutta 84

Ratati-Divasa Suttaṃ

Day and Night

---

[304]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow six things,
come day come night,
just a falling away in right things may be expected,
not a growth.

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk desires much,
is fretful,

discontented with this and that requisite:
robe,
alms,
lodging,
medicaments;
is without faith;
is without virtue;
is indolent;
is forgetful in mindfulness;
and lacks insight.

Monks, if a monk follow these six,
come day come night,
just a falling away in right things may be expected,
not a growth.'

§

But, monks, if a monk follow six things,
come day come night,
just a growth in right things may be expected,
not a falling away.

What six?

Herein[ed1], monks, a monk desires little,
is not fretful,
is contented with this and that requisite:
robe,
alms,
lodging,
medicaments;
has faith;

has virtue;
is not indolent;
is not forgetful in mindfulness;
and has insight.

Monks, if a monk follow these six,
come day come night,
just a growth in right things may be expected,
not a falling away.'

---

ed1 Hare abridged with the statement 'But the converse holds'. But the converse can be worded in several different ways. I have made a choice of one.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 85

Sīti-Bhāva Suttaṃ

The Cool

---

[304]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk follow six things,
he cannot become[1] one who realizes the cool above all.

What six?

Herein,[2] monks, a monk checks not the mind when it ought to be checked;
exerts not the mind when it ought to be exerted;

gladdens not the mind when it ought to be gladdened;
gives no heed to the mind when it ought to be given heed to;
is bent on low things
and finds delight in life's bundle.[3]

Verily, monks, if a monk follow these six,
he cannot become one
who realizes the cool above all.'

§

"Monks, if a monk follow six things,
he can become one
who realizes the cool above all.

What six?

Herein, monks, a monk
checks the mind when it ought to be checked;
exerts the mind when it ought to be exerted;
gladdens the mind when it ought to be gladdened;
gives heed to the mind when it ought to be given heed to;
is bent on excellence,
and finds delight in Nibbāana.

Verily, monks, if a monk follow these six,
he can become one
who realizes the cool above all.'

---

[1] Abhabbo.

[2] See Vism. trsl. 284.

[3] Sakkāya. Above VI, § 14.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 86

Āvaraṇa Suttaṃ

The Stops[1]

---

[304]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, cumbered by six conditions,
though one listen to Saddhamma,
he cannot become one
to enter the right way
of right things.[2]

What six?

He[3] is cumbered by the stop of action,
he is cumbered by the stop of vice,
[305] he is cumbered by the stop of (action's) ripening, he is an unbeliever,
he lacks urge
he lacks insight.

Monks, cumbered by these six conditions,
though one listen to Saddhamma,
he cannot become one
to enter the right way
of right things.

§

But, monks, unencumbered by six conditions,
if one listen to Saddhamma,
he can become one
to enter the right way
of right things.'

What six?

He is unencumbered by the stop of action,
he is unencumbered by the stop of vice,
he is unencumbered by the stop of (action's) ripening,
he is a believer,
he possesses urge
he possesses insight.

Monks, unencumbered by six conditions,
if one listen to Saddhamma,
he can become one

to enter the right way
of right things.'

---

[1] Āvaraṇatā.

[2] Niyāma, Pts. of Contr. 383 ff.

[3] Vism. trsl. 203. Cf. Vibh. 342; Pug. 13; Mil. 154. Comy. explains these three thus: (1) Pañcahi ānantariya-kammehi (see DhS. trsl. 267 and next sutta); (2) niyata-micchādiṭṭhiyā; (3) akusala-vipāka-patisandhiyā vā kusaia-vipākehi ahetuka-paṭisandhiyā vā.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 87

Voropita Suttaṃ

The Stop of Action[1]

---

[305]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, cumbered by six conditions,
though one listen to Saddhamma,
he cannot become one
to enter the right way
of right things.

What six?

(By him)
his[2] mother's life has been taken,
his father's life has been taken,
an arahant's life has been taken,
the Tathāgata's blood has been drawn intentionally,
the Order embroiled,
he is weak in insight,
he is a witless dullard.

"Monks, cumbered by these six conditions,
though one listen to Saddhamma,
he cannot become one
to enter the right way
of right things.

§

But, monks, unencumbered by six conditions,
if one listen to Saddhamma,
he can become one
to enter the right way
of right things.'

What six?

(By him)
mother's life has not been taken,
his father's life has not been taken,
an arahant's life has not been taken,
the Tathāgata's blood has not been drawn intentionally,
the Order has not embroiled,
he is insightful,
he is not a witless dullard.

Monks, unencumbered by six conditions,
if one listen to Saddhamma,
he can become one
to enter the right way
of right things.'

This sutta should be read in conjunction with AN 6.86.

---

[1] The Uddāna omits to mention this sutta.

[2] Cf. above, V. § 129

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 88

Sussūsati Suttaṃ

No Desire to Listen

---

[305]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, cumbered by six conditions,
though one listen to Saddhamma,
he cannot become one
to enter the right way
of right things.

He has no desire to listen,
incline the ear,
apply a heart of understanding;

when the Dhamma-discipline declared by the Tathāgata is taught,
he grasps the profitless, rejects the profitable
and possesses not himself in harmony and patience.[ed1]

"Monks, cumbered by these six conditions,
though one listen to Saddhamma,
he cannot become one
to enter the right way
of right things.

§

But, monks, unencumbered by six conditions,
if one listen to Saddhamma,
he can become one
to enter the right way
of right things.'

What six?

He has desire to listen,
incline the ear,
apply a heart of understanding;
when the Dhamma-discipline declared by the Tathāgata is taught,
he grasps the profitable, rejects the profitless
and possesses himself in harmony and patience.

Monks, unencumbered by six conditions,
if one listen to Saddhamma,
he can become one

to enter the right way
of right things.'

This sutta should be read in conjunction with AN 6.86.

---

ed1 The first item in Hare's translation counts as 3.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 89

Appahāya Suttaṃ

To Be Given Up

---

[305]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he becomes one
who cannot realize
the achievement of right view.[1]

What six?

The wrong view of life's bundle,
doubt,

belief in the adequacy of rule and rite,
passion that leads to the ill way,
hate leads to the ill way,
infatuation leads to the ill way.

[306] Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he becomes one
who cannot realize
the achievement of right view.

§

But by giving up these six things,
he becomes one
who can realize
the achievement of right view.

What six?

The wrong view of life's bundle,
doubt,
belief in the adequacy of rule and rite,
passion that leads to the ill way,
hate leads to the ill way,
infatuation leads to the ill way.

Verily, monks, by giving up these six things,
he becomes one
who can realize
the achievement of right view.

[1] Diṭṭhisampadā-, see Pts of Contr. 269

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 90

Pahīṇa Suttaṃ

They Are Given Up

---

[306]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these six things are given up
by a person who has achieved right view.

What six?'

The wrong view of life's bundle,
doubt,
belief in the adequacy of rule and rite,
passion that leads to the ill way,

hate leads to the ill way,
infatuation leads to the ill way.

Verily, monks, these six things are given up
by a person who has achieved right view.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 91

Abhabba Suttaṃ

Cannot Be Framed

---

[306]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, a person who has achieved right view cannot become one to frame six things.

What six?'

The wrong view of life's bundle,
doubt,
belief in the adequacy of rule and rite,
passion that leads to the ill way,

hate leads to the ill way,
infatuation leads to the ill way.

Verily, monks, a person who has achieved right view cannot become one to frame these six things..

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 92

Abhabba-ṭ-Ṭhāna Suttaṃ

The Teacher

---

[306]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these six occasions which cannot become.

What six?

One who has achieved right view cannot become one who will live without respect,
without regard,
for the Teacher,

▪

one who has achieved right view
cannot become one who will live without respect,
without regard,
for the Dhamma,

▪

one who has achieved right view
cannot become one who will live without respect,
without regard,
for the the Order,

▪

one who has achieved right view
cannot become one who will live without respect,
without regard,
for the the training;

▪

one who has achieved right view
cannot become one who will fall back on the view:
"Nothing matters,'[1]

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot become one who will beget the eighth state of becoming.[2]

Verily, monks, these are the six occasions which cannot become.'

---

[1] Anāgamaniyaṃ vatthuṃ paccāgantuṃ. Comy. guilty dread and (the sixty-two) heretical views; see above V, § 147; A. i, 27.

[2] Aṭṭhamaṃ bhavaṃ. Comy. kāmāvacare aṭṭhamaṃ paṭisandhiṃ.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 93

Dutiya Abhabba-ṭ-Ṭhāna Suttaṃ

Any Phenomenon

---

[306]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these six occasions which cannot become.

What six?

One who has achieved right view cannot become one who will accept any phenomenon as permanent,

▪

one who has achieved right view
cannot accept any phenomenon as happiness,

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot accept any thing as self,

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot do an unpardonable act,

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot fall back on curious ceremonies[1] for purification,

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot seek outside (the Order) for a gift-worthy.'

Verily, monks, these are the six occasions which cannot become.'

---

[1] Above V, § 175.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 94

Tatiya Abhabba-ṭ-Ṭhāna Suttaṃ

His Mother

---

[306]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these six occasions
which cannot become.

What six?

One who has achieved right view cannot become one who will take his mother's life,

▪

one who has achieved right view
cannot become one who will take his father's life,

▪

one who has achieved right view
cannot become one who will take an arahant's life,

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot become one who with evil mind draw the blood of the Tathāgata,

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot become one to embroil the Order,

▪

one who has achieved right view cannot become one to point to another teacher.'

Verily, monks, these are the six occasions
which cannot become.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
IX. Sīti Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter IX: The Cool

Sutta 95

Catuttha Abhabba-ṭ-Ṭhāna Suttaṃ

Self-Wrought

---

[307]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these six occasions
which cannot become.

What six?

He who has achieved right view
cannot become one
who will fall back on the view

that weal and woe
are self-wrought;[1]

▪

he who has achieved right view
cannot become one
who will fall back on the view
that weal and woe
are wrought by another;

▪

he who has achieved right view
cannot become one
who will fall back on the view
that weal and woe
are wrought both by oneself and another;

▪

he who has achieved right view
cannot become one
who will fall back on the view
that weal and woe
arise by chance,[2]
are wrought without act of the self;

▪

he who has achieved right view
cannot become one
who will fall back on the view
that weal and woe
arise by chance,
are wrought without act of another;

▪

he who has achieved right view
cannot become one
who will fall back on the view
that weal and woe
arise by chance,
are wrought without act of both the self and another.

▪

And what is the cause of that?

Truly, monks, to one who has achieved right view cause and the causal origin of things are rightly discerned.

Verily, monks, these are the six occasions
which cannot become.'

---

[1] Sayaṃkataṃ and asayaṃkāraṃ; cf. kammassaka at V. § 57, and attakāra VI, § 38.

[2] Cf. D. iii, 138; S. ii, 19 (K.S. ii, 15); Ud. 69; see J.R.A.S., 1031, p. 566 ff.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 96

Pātu-Bhāva Suttaṃ

The Manifesting

---

[307]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, the manifesting of six
is hard to come by in the world.

What six?

The[1] manifesting of the Tathāgata,
arahant,
fully enlightened,
is hard to come by in the world;

▪

a teacher of the Tathāgata-declared Dhamma-discipline,
is hard to come by in the world;

▪

rebirth in the Ariyan region;[2],
is hard to come by in the world;

▪

entire sense-governance,
is hard to come by in the world;

▪

freedom from stupidity, folly
and blindness,
is hard to come by in the world;

▪

the desire to do right
is hard to come by in the world.

Verily, monks, the manifesting of these six
is hard to come by in the world.'

---

[1] Cf. above V, $ 143.

[2] Ariyāyatane. Comy. majjhima-dese.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 97

Ānisaṃsa Suttaṃ

Advantages

---

[307]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these are the six advantages in realizing the fruit of Streamwinning.

What six?

There is certainty in Saddhamma,
no liableness to fall away,
none of the ill of the restricted,[1]
there is the knowledge which cannot be imparted, cause is rightly discerned by one

and the causal origin of things.

Verily, monks, these are the six advantages in realizing the fruit of Streamwinning.'

---

[1] Pariyanṭa-katassa dukkhaṃ na hoti.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 98

Anicca Suttaṃ

Impermanence

---

[308]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, monks, that a monk who perceives permanence in any phenomenon shall live in harmony and patience -
that cannot be;

▪

that without harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that cannot be;

▪

that without entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that cannot be.

§

But, monks, that a monk who perceives impermanence in all phenomenon
shall live in harmony and patience -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that shall surely be.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 99

Dukkha Suttaṃ

Ill

---

[308]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, monks, that a monk who perceives happiness in any phenomenon
shall live in harmony and patience -
that cannot be;

▪

that without harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that cannot be;

▪

that without entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that cannot be.

§

But, monks, that a monk who perceives Ill in all phenomenon
shall live in harmony and patience -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that shall surely be.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 100

Anatta Suttaṃ

Not-Self

---

[308]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, monks, that a monk who perceives the self in any thing
shall live in harmony and patience -
that cannot be;

▪

that without harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that cannot be;

▪

that without entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that cannot be.

§

But, monks, that a monk who perceives not-self in all things
shall live in harmony and patience -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that shall surely be.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 101

Nibbāna Suttaṃ

Nibbāna

---

[308]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

'Verily, monks, that a monk who perceives Ill in Nibbāna
shall live in harmony and patience -
that cannot be;

▪

that without harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that cannot be;

▪

that without entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that cannot be.

§

But, monks, that a monk who perceives happiness in Nibbāna
shall live in harmony and patience -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with harmony and patience,
he shall enter the right way -
that shall surely be;

▪

that with entering the right way,
he shall realize the fruit of Streamwinning,
the fruit of Once-returning,
the fruit of Non-returning
arahantship
that shall surely be.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 102

Ānisaṃsa Suttaṃ

Without Reserve (a)[1]

---

[308]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk perceive six advantages,
it is enough to establish,
without reserve,
the thought of impermanence anent all phenomena.

What six?

"Then[2] all phenomena shall appear to me as lacking fixity;

▪

my mind shall find no delight in any world;

▪

my mind shall rise above every world;

▪

my thoughts shall be inclined towards Nibbāna;

▪

the fetters in me shall go towards their ceasing;

▪

and I shall follow the course of highest recluseship."

[309] Verily, monks, if a monk perceive these six advantages,
it is enough to establish,
without reserve,
the thought of impermanence anent all phenomena.'

---

[1] The Uddāna, with S.e., tayo anodhi saṅvuttā. P.E.D. does not notice saṅvutta.

[2] Ca.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 103

Ukkhittāsika Suttaṃ

Without Reserve (b)

---

[309]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk perceive six advantages,
it is enough to establish,
without reserve,
the thought of ill anent all phenomena.

What six?

"Amid all phenomena, the thought of Nibbāna shall be present with me, as a slayer with drawn sword;[1]

▪

my mind shall rise above every world;

▪

I shall become a seer at peace in Nibbāna;

▪

by me lurking tendencies shall be rooted out;

▪

I shall become a doer of what ought to be done;
and I shall minister to the Teacher with loving service."

Verily, monks, if a monk perceive these six advantages,
it is enough to establish,
without reserve,
the thought of ill anent all phenomena.'

---

[1] Cf. A. iv, 52.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 104

Ukkhittāsika Suttaṃ

Without Reserve (c)

---

[309]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, if a monk perceive six advantages,
it is enough to establish,
without reserve,
the thought of not-self anent all things.

What six?

Then in any world I shall become no part of it;[1]

▪

all that makes for the "I" in me shall be checked;

▪

all that makes for the "mine" shall be checked;

▪

mine shall be the knowledge that cannot be imparted;

▪

and by me cause shall be rightly discerned
and the causal origin of things."[2]

Verily, monks, if a monk perceive these six advantages,
it is enough to establish,
without reserve,
the thought of not-self anent all things.'

---

[1] Sabbaloke ca atammayo (not made of that) bhavissāmi; see G.S. i, 133 n.

[2] Buddh. Psych. 99.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 105

Bhava Suttaṃ

Becoming[1]

---

[309]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these three spheres of becoming
must be given up,
and there must be training in three trainings.

§

What three spheres must be given up?

[310] The sphere of sense-desire, the form-sphere[2]
and the formless spheres of becoming.

These three spheres
must be given up.

■

And in what three
must there be training?

In further[3] virtue,
in further thought
and in further insight.

In these three trainings there must be training.

§

Verily, monks, when by a monk these three spheres of becoming have been given up
and in these three trainings he in training has been trained,
the monk is said[4] to have cut off craving,
rolled back the bolts,
and mastering pride completely,
has made an end of Ill.'

[1] Cf. A. iv, 52.

[2] Rūpa-bhavo = the Brahma-world.

[3] Adhi-

[4] Cf. above V, § 200.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
X. Ānisaṅsa Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter X: Advantages

Sutta 106

Taṇhā Suttaṃ

Craving

---

[310]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, these three cravings
must be given up
and these three forms of pride.

§

What three cravings?

The craving for lust,
for becoming
and for ceasing.[1]

These three cravings must be given up.

▪

And what three forms of pride
must be given up?

Thinking[2] of self,
thinking lowly of self
and thinking much of self.

These three forms must be given up.

§

Verily, monks, when a monk has given up these three cravings
and these three forms of pride,
he is said to have cut off craving,
rolled back the bolts,
and mastering pride completely,
has made an end of Ill.'

---

[1] Vi-bhava, ? more becoming.

[2] Cf. above VI, § 76.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 107

Rāga Suttaṃ

Passion

---

[310]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Passion,
hatred
and delusion.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

▪

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of passion,
cultivate the foul in it;

▪

to get rid of [311] hatred, cultivate amity;

▪

to get rid of delusion, cultivate insight.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 108

Du-c-carita Suttaṃ

Doing Ill

---

[311]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Doing ill in deed,
doing ill in word
doing ill in thought.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of doing ill in deed,
cultivate doing well in deed;

▪

to get rid of doing ill in word, cultivate doing well in word;

▪

to get rid of doing ill in thought, cultivate doing well in thought.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 109

Vitakka Suttaṃ

Thinking[1]

---

[311]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Sense-desire-thinking,
ill-will-thinking
and harm-thinking.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of sense-desire-thinking,
cultivate renunciation-thinking;

▪

to get rid of ill-will-thinking, cultivate non-ill-will-thinking;

▪

to get rid of harm-thinking, cultivate non-harm-thinking.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

---

[1] Vitakka, cognition.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 110

Saññā Suttaṃ

Thoughts[1]

---

[110]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Sense-desire-thoughts,
ill-will-thoughts
and harm-thoughts.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of sense-desire-thinking,
cultivate renunciation-thoughts;

▪

to get rid of ill-will-thoughts, cultivate non-ill-will-thoughts;

▪

to get rid of harm-thoughts, cultivate non-harm-thoughts,

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

---

[1] Saññā.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 111

Dhātu Suttaṃ

Principles[1]

---

[311]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Sense-desire-principles, ill-will-principles
and harm-principles.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of sense-desire-principles, cultivate renunciation-principles;

▪

to get rid of ill-will-principles, cultivate non-ill-will-principles;

▪

to get rid of harm-principles, cultivate non-harm-principles.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

---

[1] Dhātu.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 112

Assāda Suttaṃ

Complacence

---

[311]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

The complacent view,
the self-view,
the wrong view.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

[312] To get rid of the complacent view, cultivate the thought of impermanence;

▪

to get rid of the self-view, cultivate the thought of not-self;

▪

to get rid of the wrong view, cultivate right view.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 113

Arati Suttaṃ

Discontent[1]

---

[312]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Discontent,
harming others
and wayfaring without Dhamma.[2]

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of discontent, cultivate gladness[3] of heart;

▪

and to get rid of harming others, cultivate not harming others;

▪

to get rid of wayfaring without Dhamma, cultivate wayfaring with Dhamma.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

---

[1] Arati

[2] Or 'immoral conduct.'

[3] Mudita from √mud.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 114

Asantuṭṭhi Suttaṃ

Being Satisfied

---

[312]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Being dissatisfied,
lacking self-possession
and wanting much.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of dissatisfaction, cultivate satisfaction;

▪

and to get rid of lack of self-possession, cultivate self-possession;

▪

to get rid of wanting much, cultivate wanting little.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 115

Dovacassatā Suttaṃ

Unruliness

---

[312]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Unruliness,
evil friendship
and being tossed about in mind.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of unruliness,
cultivate rule;

▪

and to get rid of evil friendship, cultivate good friendship;

▪

to get rid of being tossed about in mind, cultivate mindfulness in breathing in and out.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XI. Tika Vagga

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XI: The Threes

Sutta 116

Uddhacca Suttaṃ

Flurry

---

[312]

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, there are these three conditions.

What three?

Flurry,
lack of restraint
and indolence.

Verily, monks, these are the three.

§

And to get rid of these three,
cultivate three.

What three?

To get rid of flurry,
cultivate calm;

▪

to get rid of lack of restraint, cultivate restraint;

▪

to get rid of indolence, cultivate earnestness.

Verily, monks, to get rid of these three conditions,
cultivate these three.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XII. Vaggāsaṅgabitā Suttanta (Sāmaññā Vaggo)

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XII: The Recital

Suttas 117-132

[The PTS has this numbered as 117 and 118-130 and has abridged the latter group and has either omitted to count, or intends not to include (it is not clear from the abridgement) (following the PTS text, but not the BJT text) the first case of Vedana, Citta, and Dhamma.]

Sutta 117

Kāy-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become

one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body.'

§

Sutta 118

Ajjhattaṃ Kāye Kāy-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Body as Body in Relation to Self[1])

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to self.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to self.'

§

Sutta 119

Bahiddhā Kāye Kāy-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Body as Body in Relation to Outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to outside.'

§

Sutta 120

Ajjhatta-bhiddha Kāye Kāy-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Body as Body in Relation to Both Self and Outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to both self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to both self and outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to both self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the body as body in relation to both self and outside.'

§

Sutta 121

Vedanāsu Vedan-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Feelings as Feelings)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings.'

§

Sutta 122

Ajjhattaṃ Vedanāsu Vedan-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Feelings as Feelings in Relation to Self)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to self.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to self.'

§

Sutta 123

Bahiddhā Vedanāsu Vedan-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the feelings as feelings in relation to outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to outside.'

§

Sutta 124

Ajjhatta-bhiddhā Vedanāsu Vedan-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Feelings as Feelings in Relation to Both Self and Outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to both self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to both self and outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to both self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the feelings as feelings in relation to both self and outside.'

§

Sutta 125

Citte Citt-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Mind as Mind)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind.'

§

Sutta 126

Ajjhattaṃ Citte Citt-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Mind as Mind in Relation to Self)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to self.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to self.'

§

Sutta 127

Bahiddhā Citte Citt-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Mind as Mind in Relation to Outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become

one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind in relation to outside.'

§

Sutta 128

Ajjhatta-bhiddhā Citte Citt-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Mind as Mind Both in Relation to Self and Outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind both in relation to self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind both in relation to self and outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind both in relation to self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the mind as mind both in relation to self and outside.'

§

Sutta 129

Dhammesu Dhamm-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Thoughts as Thoughts)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts.'

§

Sutta 130

Ajjhattaṃ Dhammesu Dhamm-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Thoughts as Thoughts in Relation to Self)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to self.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to self.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to self.'

§

Sutta 131

Bahiddhā Dhammesu Dhamm-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Thoughts as Thoughts in Relation to Outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,

being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one
who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to outside.'

§

Sutta 132

Ajjhatta-bhiddhā Dhammesu Dhamm-ā-nupassī Suttaṃ

Contemplation (of the Thoughts as Thoughts in Relation to both Self and Outside)

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, save one give up six things,
he cannot become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to both self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, save one give up these six,
he cannot become one

who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to both self and outside.'

But, monks, if one give up six things,
he can become
one who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to both self and outside.

What six?

Delight in activity,
gossip,
sleep,
company,
being without a guard on the sense-doors
and immoderate in eating.

Verily, monks, if one give up these six,
he can become one
who abides in contemplation
of the thoughts as thoughts in relation to both self and outside.'

---

[1] Ajjhattaṃ

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
Paṇṇāsakāsaṅgahitā Vaggā
Vaggāsaṅgahitā suttantā

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XII: The Recital

Suttas 131-151
[PTS Pali #119-120]

---

[313]

Sutta 131

He Sees The Deathless

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Tapussa,
because of the Tathāgata,[1]
has gone to the end,[2]
seen the deathless
and has his being[3] in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman [314] Tapussa,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,

seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

He sees the Deathless[4]

132

Bhallika

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Bhallika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Bhallika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,

seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

133

Sudatta Anāthapiṇḍika

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Sudatta Anāthapiṇḍika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Sudatta Anāthapiṇḍika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

134

Citta Macchikāsaṇḍika

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Citta Macchikāsaṇḍika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Citta Macchikāsaṇḍika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

135

Hatthaka Āḷavaka

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Hatthaka Āḷavaka,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Hatthaka Āḷavaka,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

136

Mahānāma Sakka

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Mahānāma Sakka,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Mahānāma Sakka,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

137

Ugga Vesālika

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Ugga Vesālika,
because of the Tathāgata,

has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Ugga Vesālika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

138

Uggata

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Uggata,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Uggata,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

139

Sūra Ambaṭṭha

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Sūra Ambaṭṭha,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma

unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Sūra Ambaṭṭha,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

140

Jīvaka Komārabhacca

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Jīvaka Komārabhacca,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,

Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Jīvaka Komārabhacca,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

141

Nakulapitā

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Nakulapitā,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Nakulapitā,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

142

Tavakaṇṇika

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Tavakaṇṇika,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Tavakaṇṇika,
because of the Tathāgata,

has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

143

Pūraṇa

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Pūraṇa,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Pūraṇa,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

144

Isidatta

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Isidatta,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Isidatta,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

145

Sandhāna

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Sandhāna,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Sandhāna,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

146

Vijaya

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Vijaya,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Vijaya,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

147

Vajiyamāhita

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Vajiyamāhita,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Vajiyamāhita,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

148

Meṇḍaka

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Meṇḍaka,
because of the Tathāgata,

has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Meṇḍaka,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

149

Vāseṭṭha

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Vāseṭṭha,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Vāseṭṭha,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

150

Ariṭṭha

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Ariṭṭha,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma

unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,
Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Ariṭṭha,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

§

151

Sārangga

'Monks, by having followed six things,
the goodman Sārangga,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

What six?

Unwavering faith in the Buddha,
unwavering faith in the Dhamma
unwavering faith in the Order,
Ariyan virtue,

Ariyan knowledge
and Ariyan release.

Verily; monks, by having followed these six,
the goodman Sārangga,
because of the Tathāgata,
has gone to the end,
seen the deathless
and has his being in the realization of the deathless.

---

[1] Tathāgate. Is Tapussa he of Vin., Mhv. i, 4 and A. iv, 438?

[2] Niṭṭhaṃ gato; a monkish gloss, quoted by P.E.D., observes: pabbajitānaṃ arahattaṃ patta; but here all are home-folk who are said have won to Nibbāna, the deathless. For some not otherwise noted here see G.S. i, 22 ff.

[3] Iriyati.

[4] I number differently from the text. For Pūraṇa and Isidatta, see above VI, § 44; Menṇḍaka at V, § 33; Ariṭṭha at K.S. v. 278, is a monk; for Vāseṭṭha see D. iii, 80; M. ii, 169; but these must be different; for Sandhāna see DA. i, 45; for Bhallika see p. 313, A. 3. Our Comy. mentions Tavakaññika only, observing 'evan nāmako gahupati' which we already knew from the text! Is he connected with Tikñña of G.S. i, 145?

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XII. Vaggāsaṅgabitā Suttanta (Sāmaññā Vaggo)
Chakkanipāte Rāgādipeyyāla Sūttāni

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XII: The Recital

Suttas 152-154

---

[314]

Sutta 152

(Understanding of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The[1] sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,

the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the full understanding of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 153

(Understanding of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The[2] ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,

the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the full understanding of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 154

(Understanding of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,

the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the full understanding of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

---

[1] Above VI, § 8.

[2] Above VI, § 9.

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XII. Vaggāsaṅgabitā Suttanta (Sāmaññā Vaggo)
Chakkanipāte Rāgādipeyyāla Sūttāni

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XII: The Recital

Suttas 155-181

---

[315]

Sutta 155

(Comprehension of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,

the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the comprehension of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 156

(Comprehension of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the comprehension of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 157

(Comprehension of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the comprehension of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 158

(Exhaustion of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 159

(Exhaustion of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 160

(Exhaustion of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the exhaustion of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 161

(Abandoning of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the abandoning of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 162

(Abandoning of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the abandoning of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 163

(Abandoning of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the abandoning of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 164

(Destruction of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the destruction of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 165

(Destruction of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the destruction of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 166

(Destruction of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the destruction of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 167

(Decay of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the decay of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 168

(Decay of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the decay of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 169

(Decay of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the decay of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 170

(Freedom From) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the freedom from passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 171

(Freedom From) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,

the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the freedom from passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 172

(Freedom From) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the freedom from passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 173

(Ending of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the ending of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 174

(Ending of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the ending of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 175

(Ending of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the ending of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 176

(Quittance of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the quittance of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 177

(Quittance of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the quittance of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 178

(Quittance of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the ending of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 179

(Renunciation of) Passion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the renunciation of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 180

(Renunciation of) Passion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the renunciation of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 181

(Renunciation of) Passion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of passion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the ending of passion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

Aṅguttara Nikāya
Chakka Nipāta
XII. Vaggāsaṅgabitā Suttanta (Sāmaññā Vaggo)
Chakkanipāte Rāgādipeyyāla Sūttāni

The Book of the Sixes

Chapter XII: The Recital

Suttas 182-661

---

[315]

Sutta 182

(Understanding of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,

the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 183

(Understanding of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 184

(Understanding of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the full understanding of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 185

(Comprehension of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the comprehension of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 186

(Comprehension of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the comprehension of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 187

(Comprehension of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the comprehension of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 188

(Exhaustion of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 189

(Exhaustion of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 190

(Exhaustion of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the exhaustion of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 191

(Abandoning of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 192

(Abandoning of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 193

(Abandoning of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the abandoning of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 194

(Destruction of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the destruction of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 195

(Destruction of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the destruction of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 196

(Destruction of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the destruction of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 197

(Decay of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the decay of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 198

(Decay of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,

the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the decay of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 199

(Decay of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the decay of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 200

(Freedom From) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the freedom from hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 201

(Freedom From) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the freedom from hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 202

(Freedom From) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the freedom from hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the freedom from hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 203

(Ending of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the ending of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 204

(Ending of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the ending of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 205

(Ending of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the ending of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the ending of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 206

(Quittance of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the quittance of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 207

(Quittance of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the quittance of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 208

(Quittance of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the quittance of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the quittance of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 209

(Renunciation of) Hatred 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 210

(Renunciation of) Hatred 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 211

(Renunciation of) Hatred 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the renunciation of hatred
these six things ought to be made to become.'

Sutta 212

(Understanding of) Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 213

(Understanding of) Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 214

(Understanding of) Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,

the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the full understanding of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 215

(Comprehension of) Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,

the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the comprehension of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 216

(Comprehension of) Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,

the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the comprehension of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 217

(Comprehension of) Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the comprehension of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the comprehension of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 218

(Exhaustion of) Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 219

(Exhaustion of) Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 220

(Exhaustion of) Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the exhaustion of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 221

(Abandoning of) Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 222

(Abandoning of) Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 223

(Abandoning of) Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the abandoning of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 224

(Destruction of) Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the destruction of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 225

(Destruction of) Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the destruction of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 226

(Destruction of) Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the destruction of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the destruction of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 227

(Decay of) Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The sight above all,
the sound above all,
the gain above all,
the training above all,
the service above all,
and the ever minding above all.

Monks, for the decay of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 228

(Decay of) Illusion 2

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The ever minding of the Buddha,
the ever minding of Dhamma,
the ever minding of the Order,
the ever minding of virtue,
the ever minding of liberality,
the ever minding of the devas.'

Monks, for the decay of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

▪

Sutta 229

(Decay of) Illusion 3

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

There the Exalted One addressed the monks, saying:

"Monks."

"Yes, lord," they replied,
and the Exalted One said:

"Monks, for the decay of illusion
six things ought to be made to become.

What six?

The thought of impermanence,
the thought of the ill therein,
the thought of there being no self in ill,
the thought of renunciation,
the thought of dispassion
the thought of ending.

Monks, for the decay of illusion
these six things ought to be made to become.'

§

Sutta 230

(Freedom From) Illusion 1

Thus have I heard:

Once the Exalted One was dwelling near Sāvatthī,
at Jeta Grove,
in Anāthapiṇḍika's Park.

